"STICK TO THE FARM."

DR. EDDY: In the Advocate of the 23d of September, I find an article headed "Stick to the Farm." After reading the piece over I came to the conclusion that a little advice in a different direction would tend to make more farmer's boys "stick to the farm," than a whole volume of exhortations written on the above subject. To begin, let us ask some of them why they do not like to stay on the farm? You will find the usual reply to be, that they do not like farming; that it is no place of enjoyment, and that they are deprived of a great many privileges that boys who are not farmers enjoy. And why this dislike to an employment so lucrative, healthful, and one that should, if it does not, yield enjoyment and happiness? I will just say, that many farmers are so close and their work is always so harrying, that they never allow their boys any means or time for recreation, excepting it is Sundays, and sometimes they do not get that. Now when these boys become of age, they not unfrequently commence life with no competency whatever. Brought up to labor early and late, from one end of the year to another, is it any wonder if they should look upon farming as a drudgery? I do not wonder at their deciding to leave the farm, and seeking to find in other places what they have not found upon the farm, a life of enjoyment and comfort. Farmers, do you wish your boys to "stick to the farm?" then you must teach them that enjoyment is to be found upon the farm, and to do this you must get them interested in the work, give them time and opportunity for wholesome recreation, and above all, give them a start in what is called this world's goods!—a small garden spot, a corner in the cornfield, or an interest in the stock, such as a pig, calf or colt, or something of the kind, which they can call their own. These may increase on their hands, and thus they will have a growing interest upon the farm, and when they are ready to start in life for themselves, they have acquired considerable skill and tact in managing the affairs of the farm.

At an early age boys prize what they can call their own very highly, and by beginning early in life you can throw around them ties that will bind them so strongly to the farm that it will never be broken. And there are other ties besides those of a pecuniary nature, which we would invite you to try—make home pleasant. Be cheerful (some of the time at least,) always be ready to contribute your share for the enjoyment of your children; let them feel that you are interested in their welfare, and when they have grown to be men and "settled" in life, you will see that by the blessing of God, the seeds of sunshine you have sown in their hearts is bearing fruit, and you will rejoice when you behold that you have not labored in vain.
—N. W. Christian Advocate.

THINGS SURPRISING TO A FOREIGNER.

Mr. Harris, of the Genesee Farmer, says that when he first came from England to this country many things surprised him: "I was surprised at the excellence of American beef and the inferiority of American mutton, and I was not surprised that the beef sold for half as much again as the mutton, while in London, mutton was worth a cent a pound more than beef. I was surprised that farmers paid so little attention to their gardens. I was surprised to find so many farmers with large, handsome houses and elegantly furnished parlors that they seldom used. In England at that time, we had a window tax, and the houses there have few windows. One of the first things that struck me was the number of windows in American houses, and the great effort that was made to shut them up and exclude the glorious American sunshine and the invigorating American atmosphere. I was surprised that everywhere I went, the people thought that particular spot the most fertile, the healthiest, and the best place on the whole Continent. I was surprised, nevertheless, that everybody was willing to sell. I was surprised at the excellence of the wheat and the inferiority of the barley. I was surprised to see the farmers so rough looking, and yet so intelligent. I was surprised to see the country ladies so much better looking than the men, and withal so interesting and discriminating. I was surprised that farmers sowed but one kind of grass seed, and that they paid so little attention to their permanent meadows. I was surprised to see them plow so wide, and still more surprised that under the influence of our cold winters, and dry, hot summers, these wide furrows tumbled all to pieces and formed, after all, a very fair seed-bed. I was surprised that farmers raised so few peas and beans, and thought so lightly of clover-hay. I was surprised that farmers could make a living from crops of wheat of from ten to twelve bushels per acre. I was surprised to hear rotten straw called manure. I was surprised at many other things—at the great net-work of railroads—at the magnificent rivers and lakes—at the marvelous rapidity with which the country was settled, and at the enterprise and practical intelligence which has accomplished such astonishing results in so short a time. But I do not think that any one thing surprised me more than this: the luxuriance of the clover crop in Western New York! I had just come from the very fountain head of agricultural science, and from the greatest experimenting farm in the world; but never had I seen such crops of clover as I saw on many farms in this section."

THE MOON AGAIN.

A subscriber in Tuscarawas Co. O., writes: "It would please a good many of your readers, if in your next issue you would give your views as to picking apples, sowing wheat, building fence, etc., etc., during certain stages of the moon." We had supposed our views on the 'moon question' were already well understood. The moon is present above the horizon during just about half of every 24 hours, though her dark side is towards us part of each month, so that we do not see her. The moon passing over us affects the tides regularly every day, and we believe its vegetation at all, the influence is as regular as the tide, and it is doubtless too small to be taken into account. A little knowledge of astronomy will dispel this moon farming. We say, plant, dig, build fences, pick apples, etc., when the soil, the season, and other things are right; the moon will do her part whether her bright or invisible face be turned towards us.

HOW THE EARTH WAS FORMED.

If the reader, after perusing the following description of the probable mode of the formation of the earth, given by an English scientific writer in a new volume, does not understand the process, he had better leave this "internal spherical vacuity," and go where bigger words are used: A formal idea of the heaven and the earth may be obtained by imagining the heaven as at first an effluviant generation from a monecentral point, occupying space; the earth, as the arrest or end of such generative action, with the gradual relaxation of central tension and abnegation of such center, the consequence being the formation of a huge internal spherical vacuity, termed in the Genetic record "earth."

A voluble Frenchman (literally a citizen of the world, we should say) was pompously naming over the different cities of Europe in which he had sojourned at various and distant periods of his life.

"I did live," said he, "in Paris twelve years; in Rome I was live six years; in London I was stay seven years; in beautiful Florence (O ze fresh grape and ze bon vin, in ze morning!) eight years; in St. Petersburgh, in ze summer-time, eight years; in Naples, I was reside eleven years;" while our friend pencil in hand was "putting down the figures."

"Do you say you lived in these European capitals all those years?"—and he read each separate entry over to the Gallic Munchausen, with the date of his sojourn in each.

"Yes; zat is right."

The figures were added up; and the way they Daboll'd was peculiar.

"Why," said the Professor, in his gravest manner, "my dear sir, you are over a hundred and seventy-five years old!"

"Ah! no—zat cannot be. Read him over again."

The statement, item by item, was recapitulated.

"Zen it is so; I am a hundred and seventy-five years old! I not mistake ze time zat I live in those places.—Knickerbocker.

KITCHEN ACCOMPLISHMENTS.—Girls don't be ashamed to learn how to do housework. Learn all you can, in every accomplishment, science and department of knowledge—especialy in the useful and social—but by all that you can prize most on earth, a happy home, do not neglect the all important part of every woman's education, the proper management of a household. Whatever your station, do not neglect any portion of the kitchen apprenticeship necessary to a thorough practical knowledge of housekeeping. None know how to command so well as those who have first learned to serve. Learn to do—then you will know how to direct.

—The following dispatch went through by telegraph a month or two since:—"Charley and Julia met at S——s yesterday—quarrelled and parted forever—met again this morning, and parted to meet no more—met again this evening, and were married."

SCOLDING.—I never knew one who was in the habit of scolding able to govern a family. What makes people scold? The want of self-government. How then can they govern others? Those who govern well are generally calm.—They are prompt and resolute, but steady and mild.

The Pan consists of four compartments—three of sheet-iron or e-sixteenth of an inch in thickness, and one of cast-iron 3/8 inches thick, to retain heat in drying down or granulating. By means of this thick casting the drying takes place more gradually, and always without burning, which is the case with no other Evaporator, and the heat is entirely under the control of the Operator, and, by means of dampers, the fire is so regulated that evaporating may be conducted with greater speed than with any other pans—at the same time finishing with same fire as slowly as may be required, without danger of scorching.
