THE CELEBRATED

HOME STOMACH BITTERS.

A REENDORSED AND PRESCRIBED BY more leading Physicians than any other tonic or stimulant now in use. They are A SURE PREVENTIVE of Fever and Ague, Intermittents, Biliousness, and all disorders arising from Miasmatic causes. They are highly recommended as an anti-dyspeptic, and in cases of constipation are invaluable as an Appetizer. They have proved most in cases of General Debility, and have never, in a single instance failed in producing the most happy results. They are particularly GENERICIAL TO FEMALES, strengthening the body, invigorating the mind and giving tone and elasticity to the whole system. The HOME BITTERS are compounded with the greatest care, and a medicine of merit has ever been offered to the public so PLEASANT TO THE TASTE, and at the same time combining so many remedial agents commended by the medical fraternity as the best known to Pharmacopoeia. It costs little to give them a fair trial, and Every Family Should Have A Bottle.

In Chicago the HOME BITTERS are vouched for as superior to any now in use by G A Mariner, Analyticol Onemist; James V Z Blaney, M D; Prof Chemistry, Rush Medical College; H S Hahn, M D; R McVicker, M D; R Walker, M D; Norman S Barnes, M D; Eastborn, M D; and R Lupiam M D.

In Cincinnati by J L Vattier, M D; A James, M D; C T Simpson, M D; S P Bonner, M D; D S Muncraft, M D; G W Bigler, M D; W T Tallafero, M D; J J Quinn, M D; J H Buckner, M D; W R Woodward, M D; G A Doherts, M D; R S Wayne, Chemist; Clus Woodward, M D; G R Taslor, M D; D W McCarty, M D; P F Maley, M D; R H Johnson, M D.

In St. Louis, Eno Sander, P H D, Analytical Chemist, pronounces the Home Bitters as superior to the celebrated Hostetter's and they have also the following endorsement of the medical profession in St. Louis:

St. Louis, July, 1870.

JAMES A JACKSON & CO.—Gentlemen:—As you have communicated to the medical profession the receipt of the Home Bitters, it cannot, therefore, be considered as a secret or a patent medicine, no patent having been taken for it. We have examined the formula for making the Home Bitters, and unhesitatingly say the combination is one of rare excellence. All the articles used in their composition are of the best class of which they belong, being highly tonic, stimulant, stomachic, carminative and slightly laxative. The mode of preparing them is strictly in accordance with the rules of Pharmacy. Having used them, seen the effects in our private practice, we take pleasure in recommending them to all persons desirous of taking bitters, as being the best Tonic and Stimulant now offered to the public. Religious Fanaticism.

[From the Boston Globe.]

A trial which strangely illustrates the fanaticism of the Russian peasantry took place the other day at Saratoff. The defendants—three men and a woman—were accused of murdering a woman named Pelagia Schvetzoff on the 18th of June, 1869. It appeared from the evidence of one of the defendants a peasant named Stassenhoff, that on the day in question Pelagia Schvetzoff, himself, and some other peasants, all of whom belonged to the sect of the "Chlysty," were driving home from a village where they had heard a sermon from one of the chief men of the sect. While on their way one of the party a woman named Prascovia Koshevnikoff, spoke in an inspired tone, calling herself "the great martyr Barbara" and "the mother of Christ," and this produced such an impression upon him (Stassenhoff) that he did all she asked. She first ordered him to throw a woman who was passing, into the river; he obeyed, but fortunately the woman could swim, and thus saved her life. Soon after he seized the woman Schvetzoff, threw her down head foremost from the cart, and holding her by her feet bumped her head and body repeatedly against the wheels until she was dead.

Prascovia Koshevnikoff, who was assuring him all the time that she would bring his victim to life again, then stopped the cart, and Stassenhoff laid the dead body in front of the wheels, upon which she led the horses twice over it. The next evidence taken was that of Prascovia Koshevnikoff. She said she belonged to the sect of the "Chlysty," and had accompanied the others to hear the sermon, but that she knew nothing about the murder. She had known the preacher for two years, and believed he was the "true God, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit." Some physicians who had examined her and the others declared they were perfectly sane, and only under the influence of religious fanaticism.

Another peasant woman swore that she had been taken to the house of the preacher, and told that he was "the true God," and that she afterward drove home with the defendants, and witnessed the manner of Pelagia Schvetzoff. The jury found a verdict of guilty against all the accused. Stassenhoff, the peasant who committed the murder, and Pascovia Koshevnikoff, the woman who instigated him to do the deed, were sentenced to seventeen years and a half hard labor in the mines, and Katssanoff, the preacher, to banishment for having propagated false religious doctrines.

Thoughts on Journalism.

[From the Nation.]

Nobody will assert that a newspaper should never assail a man's character. To lay down any such rule would be to deprive the press of three-fourths of its usefulness, and give a large body of knaves all but complete impunity. Nor should an editor be required to know personally the facts of every charge he makes. If every editor had to satisfy himself of the truth of everything he published, newspapers would cease to appear. Nor is he bound to give the name of everybody who criticises the opinions or public career of public men. It makes no difference to anybody who writes the comments which appear in a newspaper on facts of general notoriety. The question in this case is not from whom do these comments come, but are they sound? But when an editor determines, for reasons of public policy, to denounce any man as a thief, or embezzler, or forger, or peculator, we believe the generally accepted and sound rule is that he should be ready to produce evidence of the truth of what he says, whenever called on by the accused person, before any tribunal whatever, libel suit or no libel suit. He is bound to show the documents on which he based his assertions, or produce the person whose word he trusted when he made them. Anybody who asks an editor to allow him to make charges of this kind in his paper, but refuses to come forward in support of them, if called upon, is unworthy of belief, and deserves no more pity, shelter, or connivance than any lurking assassin or sneak thief. Skulking patriots, who are anxious to make "exposures" of private character, but unwilling to shoulder the responsibility of them, are a very large class. Every editor is familiar with them, but we believe it is the general practice of editors to refuse them a hearing.

Anecdote of Wigfall.

A Texas correspondent sends the following: Mr. Louis T. Wigfall, one of the leading secessionists of the South, felt, after Lee's surrender, somewhat embarrassed as to his corporeal safety in a land then in possession of his enemies. He left Richmond in disguise, and traveled on mule back, alone, for Texas. Dick Taylor had also surrendered, and all the ferries and crossings were in the hands of the Federal forces. Wigfall could pursue no other course but to risk himself to be put across the Mississippi by a detachment of Union Soldiers. He was well disguised. Observing that no allusion was made to himself, and wishing to know if possible, how the wind blew, he began a general tirade against the leading Confederates, winding up by inquiring what would be done with that scamp Wigfall if they should catch him. The soldiers replied, they supposed they would hang him. "Yes, they would do exactly right, and I would pull at one end of the rope!" replied Wigfall, mounting his mule and trotting off westward.

DID THE BEST HE COULD.—A youngster, who had been detected by his father in the act of stealing some fruit stored for winter consumption, was angrily bidden to "go into the next room and prepare himself for a severe flogging." Having finished the work he had in hand, the inexorable parent armed himself with a stout horsewhip, and went in search of the culprit, whom he found ornament with a hump at which Quasimodo himself would have shuddered. "What on earth have you on your back?" asked the wondering sire. "A leather apron," replied John, "three times doubled. You told me to prepare myself for a severe flogging, and I have done the best I could."

AN EPISCOPAL HORSE.—In one of his tours Elder John Leland came up at night to a public house where he was acquainted and where he proposed to pass the night. The landlord met him with a smiling countenance, and told him that, having built a new barn, he was nicely prepared to accommodate the clergy. "I have," said he, "a stable with all the improvements, for Episcopal horses, a good sort of stable for Presbyterian horses, and I keep the old barn for Baptist horses; the Lord is accordingly to the style of the house." "Well," replied the Elder, "Everybody knows that I am a Baptist, but my horse is an Episcopalian."

WHAT IS COURTSHIP?—A bewildering definition of the word "courtship" was given by a witness in an amusing breach of promise case recently tried in London. Mr. Chambers, counsel for the plaintiff, remonstrated with the witness for using the word "I am an old bachelor," said he, "and don't understand courtship. How is it done? What is courtship?" The witness, who being a married lady might reasonably be expected to answer by the light of her own experience, defined it thus:—"Looking at each other, taking hold of each other's hands, and all that kind of thing." The definition, though puzzling to old bachelors, is good. Persons experienced in such matters will have no difficulty interpreting the last clause to their own satisfaction; indeed, "all that sort of thing" is quite as exact an interpretation as is wanted for the indescribable art of making love.

A few days ago there died at Howell, Mich., of intemperance, a man who, twelve years ago, was a brilliant and prosperous lawyer in that town. He was buried out of the Masonic charity fund, from which for some time before his death he had been supported. During this time his beautiful and accomplished wife has become insane, and his four lovely children are penniless and scattered, no two living together.

If you don't wish to fall in love, keep away from calico. You can no more play with the girls without losing your heart, then you can play at roulette without losing your money. As Dobbins aptly remarks, the heart-string to women are like the tendrils of a vine—always feelling about for something to cling to. The consequence is, that before you have any idea of going, you are gone, like a one-legged stove at auction.

THE increasing demand for iron ores suitable for the manufacture of Bessemer steel is inducing English manufacturers to turn their attention to foreign mines, and it seems not improbable that the American pig-irons may ere long be exported to England for the purpose. An influential company has been formed for working some extensive Spanish mines in Bilboa.
