LETTER from MISS SINCLAIR regarding BEATRICE.—We trust that in publishing the following letter we do no injustice to the writer, as the noble sentiments and manliah spirit evinced by her are so worthy of imitation, that we should not feel justified in not giving it publicity:
VICARAGE, KENSINGTON, LONDON, Monday, July 11, 1853.
To Messrs. Dewitt & Davenport:
GENTLEMEN: I had the pleasure to receive, this morning, the copy you did me the favor to forward me of Beatrice, the type and general aspect of which do credit to every possible feature in the work.
If anything could justify a Christian author with any feeling of pride, it might be caused by the hope now afforded me, that my writings may in any degree repay the debt I already owe to many American authors for countless hours of instruction and amusement, as I have long studied your poets and divines with admiration and with real advantage. It never was my wish that the law of Copyright should be established between the two great nations of England and America because we have owed the republication of many most valuable works from your country, to the facility of our free intercourse; and in so far as Beatrice is kindly welcomed by the American public, I feel only the more gratified at being ranked among those American authors whom I so greatly respect. Like most authors, I am not gifted with affluence, but I would a thousand times rather be the author of a fair domestic tale, if enough to lay happiness to heart, in the shape of a fair domestic tale, or the great cause of Protestantism, than be a Croesus. Truth has acknowledged my earnest endeavor to advocate its life-giving doctrines.
My brother, John Sinclair, Archdeacon, of Middlesex, has been requested by the Bishops and Clergy of the Church of England, to represent them in a deputation to the Propagation Society of New-York, and if he can so arrange the affairs of his parish, containing 17,000 persons, as to be absent so long, he intends to sail from Liverpool, on the 23d August. As we are coming to the Pre-Eminent Mountain, and my father was the friend and correspondent of Washington, I feel that silence would be peculiarly hit my brother for his important errand, and though no public occasion I have not felt it suitable to accompany him, yet I trust that in some future day we may execute a plan often discussed in by-gone years, of going together to pay our tribute of respect and admiration to the glorious scenery and the noble institutions of your country. I have the honour to be, gentlemen, ever with esteem, CATHERINE SINCLAIR.
