CREEDON VICTORIOUS

heart was almost broken when he was defeated by Fitzsimmons. He brooded over this for months, and likewise he is now brooding over the opinion which it is claimed the sports in the east have of him.

The result is that his mind has become temporarily unhinged, and he is now at St. Joseph's hospital undergoing treatment. He has been there since Monday and is pursued by the idea that his friends, or some of them, are trying to make away with him. Other vagaries also run in his mind, and it will require perfect rest to straighten out the tangles in his brain. The house physician at St. Joseph's thinks that eventually Dempsey will be all right again; but for a time it looked rather serious.

Dempsey has been drinking hard ever since he has been in Portland, where he has a wife and two children, and it is thought that the excess of liquor may have had some cause in bringing about the trouble. Dempsey has been a little queer ever since his defeat by Fitzsimmons, and at the time his friends and intimates thought his heart would break.

Will Not Meet Dempsey.

It was announced in New York on Tuesday that the international prize fight for $20,000 between Jack Dempsey, of Portland, and Dick Burge, of New Castle, England, is declared off, Burge declining to go on with the arrangements for the match owing to Dempsey's illness.

The Very Latest.

Word came from St. Paul yesterday that Dempsey is now all right, and that the fight with Burge will take place. It is said that Dempsey will begin training October 1 at Rockaway Beach.

O'Donnell May Meet Choyanski.

If Steve O'Donnell, the Australian heavyweight, wins his fight with Jack Cattannach, of Providence, R. I., at the Coney Island Athletic club, he will probably be matched to fight Joe Choyanski. The club's board of directors decided upon this move on Sunday night. O'Donnell is in excellent trim, and is confident of winning. Cattannach, however, has been training hard, and writes that he feels sure of carrying off the big end of the $2,500 purse.

Missourians Will Fight.

Frank Crosby and Harry Sharp, noted Missouri lightweights, have arranged for a match, which will be a fight to a finish, according to Marquis of Queensbury rules, with three ounce gloves. The contest will probably be fought before the Athletic club of Kansas City Kan., and will occur on or before November 15. It will be for $500 a side and the lightweight championship of Missouri, neither principal to weigh over 133 pounds.

JOHN L. DID NOT RUN.

McClusky's Bravery Came After the Boston Man Had Gone.

NEW YORK, August 15.—Some of the stories now in circulation about the quarrel between John L. Sullivan and McClusky at the Vanderbilt hotel Tuesday night last, at which the latter fired a shot at Sullivan, are conflicting. The spectators of the affair say that the two men grumbled at each other for ten minutes or so, McClusky all the time edging toward the Lexington avenue door and Sullivan following him up. At length becoming heated by some remark of the ex-champion, McClusky hauled off and struck John L. Then he turned and ran for his life. An hour afterwards McClusky returned accompanied by a crowd of partisans, and blustered about, asking for Sullivan, whom he had reason to know was not in the hotel. "There was no pistol shot fired," said a man who was present, "but once on this second visit McClusky flourished a revolver. Then the attendants in the cafe requested him to leave and he did so." The opinion seems to prevail among sporting men that McClusky is seeking a little notoriety at John L.'s expense.

Lincoln Roadster Club.

The matinee of the Lincoln Roadster club yesterday afternoon, the last of the season, was largely attended; there was an unusual number of good races. Owing to the early hour at which THE COURIER goes to press it was impossible to get a detailed account of the races in this issue.

Mrs. Sam Wessel and son Henry accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Friend returned from Manitou Col. where they spent the summer, enjoying the invigorating mountain air.

A RUN ON THE BANK

Many stories are afloat concerning the clever means resorted to by various people for the protection of savings banks endangered by the presence of a run by depositors, but the following related by a correspondent is probably the best of all the stock, says the Omaha Excelsior. A certain Mr. Kelley was at one time, in 1871, cashier of the Corrigan street railway company in Kansas City, and the accounts of the company were kept in the National bank of Commerce. The much despised penny was not then in general use there as now. People were ashamed to pay for any article with pennies, except, perhaps, postage stamps, and the old-fashioned "fare box" in the cars became a dumping place for them. From $3 to $5 would be found in the boxes by Mr. Kelley every day. He usually dumped them in sacks and stored them in the company's vault. During the crisis of '71 the people became very much excited and flocked to the bank in droves to withdraw their deposits. Runs were made on nearly all the banks in the city and many were forced to suspend.

One day a run was made upon the Kansas City Savings bank, and the people were lined up waiting their turns to reach the tellers, who were paying out money by the basketful, when a happy thought struck Mr. Kelley. He went to the police station, secured three policemen to guard his treasure, loaded eight sacks of copper pennies upon a wheelbarrow and took them down to the bank. The sacks originally contained gold and were labelled "25,000" in great big black letters. Arriving at the bank an old colored woman, who had come to withdraw her small savings, called out: "Why Mistah Kelley, wha' fo' yo' put all that money in here when we's a-drawin' our money all out?" Kelley replied: "That's all right. This bank isn't going to bust. I can put more money in here in one day than all you people can draw out in six months," as he trudged into the bank with the last sack. This display of confidence on the part of the street railway company had a quieting effect upon the crowd and they rapidly dwindled away. The sacks contained just $40, but it saved the bank.

This is another little story going around in regard to how a young Irish cashier stopped a run on a bank some years ago. He was paying out silver as fast as he could and, becoming tired of the job, sent one of the assistants into the back room with a bushel of dollars and instructions to heat the whole mass red hot. When they were done to a turn he began ladeling them out to depositors. The first man who received his deposit said something about "Helen Blazes" and dropped the entire ladelful on the floor. The cashier then said, coolly, "Gentlemen, you will have to take 'em that way. We are turning them out as fast as we can melt and mould them, and if you can't wait till they cool, d—n it, you'll have to take 'em hot!" They waited.

The Chinese pay their doctor only so long as he keeps them in health. They believe in preventing rather than curing disease. This is sound sense, and one of the strongest recommendations of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, a medicine which not only cures diseases but prevents them.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the Eustachian tubes. When these tubes get inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give $100 for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

WITH THE AUTHORS

Last week THE COURIER quoted some uncomplimentary remarks by Eugene Field concerning the "little tin gods of literature" who have erected thrones along the eastern coast of the United States, meaning more especially Richard Watson Gilder, the dilettante editor of the Century, and the Century's literary pets. The New York Sun took the matter up the other day, and said, in part:

"He has lately expressed a contemptuous opinion of our eastern authors and declared that if the west is ever to have any literature of any vigor, it must cut loose absolutely from their enfeebling influence. Apparently he takes the ground that the contemporary estimate of the value of their productions is too high, and that consequently they are making more money than their merits entitle them to. He describes them as a poor lot, and calls them very bad names to express his contempt for their timidity and namby-pambyism. If they were out of the way, he thinks literature would be better off.

Mr. Eugene Field is a man of a delightful and various genius, and his critical faculty is deserving of high respect. Hence we hesitate to condemn his judgement of eastern authorship, without careful consideration. He is speaking of the authors whose names have been kept conspicuously before the public as the literary leaders hereabouts, and whose fame is revered in the Authors' club. It cannot be truthfully denied that some of them are open to the charge of feebleness which he brings against them. The contribution to permanent literature made by the whole crowd is probably small; and many of them are still banking on a reputation easily won at a less critical period. At best, little of the present production is notable. It is not up to the literary and intellectual average of very much of the reporting of the Sun; and the same may be said of most of the contents of the magazines. Intellectual vigor does not often appear among those writers. They seem to be afraid of each other, afraid that they will be sat upon by their fellows if they write naturally, without affectation, and honestly. Thus they miss individuality of style, and lack spontaneity. They are more or less the literary humbugs that Mr. Eugene Field calls them."
