The Trustees have further resolved after receiving $1,000,000, to redeem the remaining unpaid 70 ⅌ cent of the certificates of profits authorized to be issued for the year 1850, and 70 ⅌ cent of those issued for the year 1851, on the 21st of December next, at which all interest thereon will cease. The amount of Bonds negotiated abroad by the President of the Pennsylvania Central Road was $300,000 at a price equal to 100 here.

Mr. Simeon Draper will hold a large sale of Stocks at auction, at the Merchants' Exchange, to-morrow, at 12½ o'clock. Among the securities offered are Georgia and Pennsylvania State, Troy City, and a large amount of first class railroad bonds.

There is no new feature to notice in money matters. The demand is still active, especially on paper, which goes at 10@12 ⅌ cent, excepting for very favorite names. Some of the Banks are discounting a little more freely but the source general. On call the supply was not perhaps quite so free as on Saturday and Monday. Some considerable amounts are wanted just now for payment of dividends, interest, &c. The drain from the West continues, but the balances being low the amount drawn is much smaller than earlier in the season.

The Exports of Merchandise of this port for October show a very large increase over the same month of last year. The figures are

Mr. Wilmer, the Superintendent of the North Carolina Copper Mine, under date of the 26th ult. writes as follows:

"As we have not been raising any ore from our Wayne Shaft, our force has been busy in opening new ground west of the shaft, and on a portion of our vein which has hitherto remained unconsidered, owing to its having been poor in Copper, but on driving at this end we have cut a fine vein of ore, nearly three feet wide, that will yield from seven to eight tons to the fathom. From the small shaft near the Wayne Shaft we are obliged to raise the ore as fast as the men break it, and I think on the surface we have now as fine a show of ore as need be seen. We have four different points to go to work on, as the grooving for our pumps is in and every point is ore. The mine is actually 30 per cent better than I have ever seen it. The question will now, without doubt, be asked, when will we be fairly under way? To this I would say, that by the middle of November we shall. But before that period we shall be running the engine and commence sinking, and by the middle be crushing, and consequently be making ore fast enough to please the most exacting."

The note adverse to consolidation by the stockholders of the Marietta and Cincinnati and the Hillsborough and Cincinnati Railroad Companies, noticed by us a few days since, was made to avoid certain legal objections. We learn that consolidation in another and more formidable shape has been secured by a joint agreement between the two Companies more acceptable than the former one which was voted down, as it avoids all individual liability of stockholders, &c.

Under the new arrangement the Hillsborough Company will be in effect and management merged into the Marietta and Cincinnati Company, and the security for the perpetual, central and harmonious action of both by one interest, is as perfectly and surely provided for as it would have been by a consolidation of the two stocks.

The receipts of the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati Road, published yesterday, were for September, and not October.

A Western financier, well posted on the subject, sends us the following communication on the subject of Railroad Stocks and Bonds:

WESTERN RAILROAD STOCKS AND BONDS.

To the Editor of The N. Y. Tribune.

SIR: That there is an unusual tightness in the money market, in the ordinary transactions among commercial men, is conceded, but by no means in proportion to the stringency that has been brought to bear upon railroad stocks and bonds. The questions arise why is this? Is there any reason why railroad bonds and stocks, that within the last twelve months were the favorite securities for investment of foreign and domestic capital, should all at once be withered by the cold shoulder of capitalists? If it is very easy to create tightness in the money market, even to the extent of panics. This does not depend so much upon the amount of money in circulation, nor upon the quantity of coin in the Banks and National Treasury, or in the hands of of individuals, nor upon the amount of gold dust brought from California or Australia, nor even upon the balance of trade between this country and Europe, as upon the rapidity of the motion of our circulating medium, upon the velocity of passage from hand to hand, in the transactions of the vast monetary affairs of the people. A ten dollar bill with a rapid movement will answer more of the financial purposes in a day, than a thousand pound note locked up in the iron chest of the Bank, the national treasury, or the pocket of the millionaire, in a century. How then is a tight money market, a panic, to be created? The answer is, arrest the velocity of capital. How is this done? By destroying confidence in monetary transactions. Then every man holds on to the money he has, for fear that if he lets it go, no matter upon what security, it is gone forever. And not satisfied with this, he requires the payment of the money he does not want, to lie unproductive in his iron safe. How is this confidence to be destroyed? By proclaiming great scarcity of money, alarming tightness in the money market, the banks curtailing their discounts, and refusing their usual accommodations, announcing that money is from 12 to 15 ⅌ cent, in the streets, with fred rate names; that the war between Russia and Turkey is still further to depress money matters, while they admit that it will advance the price of all articles produced here for the consumption of their armies, and that their wars, revolutions and convulsions must bring millions of capital here for safe investment as well from England, France and Germany, that may be involved in their struggles for power. Stop the motion of circulation, by any means you may resort to, and you have effected the object. Money will become scarce, not because there is less money in fact, for who doubts that there is more money now than there was twelve months ago? The money has not been destroyed, but its life blood has been affected by the want of confidence that has been created in the public mind, exerting to a greater or lesser degree the rapidity of its motion in monetary transactions. Is there a cause for this? Is it that we have less of the precious metals, as a basis for our circulation, than usual? Certainly not; we never had so much before. Do the gold mines produce less than we anticipated? Look to the returns from California and Australia for the answer. Is it because our country produces less of the elements of commercial life than formerly? Not so; the products of this country have never been so great. Is it owing to the want of markets for our products? Certainly not; our markets have never been so good, nor prices, since 1837, so high for the produce of our soil. Is our commerce crippled? Certainly not. It was never more flourishing. Is it because our industry and enterprise have relaxed any of their former activity? Evidently not, there never was a period in the history of our country when the producing masses were so actively and profitably engaged. Is it then, as some pretend, that we have built too many railroads? Look at the immense business our railroads are doing everywhere, developing the resources of the country, with a constant demand at full rates for all they can do up to their highest capacity, and the question is answered. There are too many moneyhunters on the ocean when commerce requires them all at the rates of freight, and goods are lying on the wharfs for the want of vessels! If not, then we have not yet railroads enough. Is confidence in our railroad stocks and bonds impaired because of losses in such investments? Do not our railroads, even in their infancy, do as much business and earn as much money as anything ever anticipated? Who of the most sanguine even supposed that the city at this early day would be that our railroads everywhere are capable to do the business of the powers given them, and that double tracks are required on one track here to do the business of this immensely productive country, in the hands of the most energetic people that ever lived? If there are any roads that are exceptions to these remarks it is because of their high expenses, heavy first cost, expenses of repairs and of operation, making big dividends impossible. A road that cost $60,000 ⅌ mile, and 50 ⅌ cent of proceeds for operation, can only do the same work as one costing $30,000 ⅌ mile and 40 ⅌ cent of proceeds for operating upon different grades, both equally well built, and both at their full capacity. Then then can you expect the same dividends on the same capacity for investments. Let each class of roads stand upon their own bottom and let the public discriminate. The motive products against involving the cheap roads of the Mississippi Valley in the fate of the roads that cannot stand upon the same platform. The railroads of the Valley of the Mississippi, were never so prosperous; each year's earnings almost double that of its predecessor, and such must be the case from year to year, as that wonderful section, or rather boast of our Union is developed. Does it not follow from this brief sketch, that there is no cause whatever for the monetary alarm with which the public mind is filled, and least of all to any misgivings on the part of capitalists in making their investments in Western railroad stocks and bonds.

INDIANA.

The citizens of Milwaukee, on Monday of last week, voted in favor of loaning the city credit for $300,000 to the Watertown Railroad.
