FINALE—The morning of the inauguration of the World's Fair is supposed to have arrived. The great city, which, for the fair time, shelters such masses of people from all parts of the known world as yet tranquil, when at daybreak the festival is ushered in by the pealing forth of the London Chimes, echoed far and near from each surrounding belfry. Soon the city is in motion, and the multitudes hasten toward the same goal, all eager to behold the stupendous realization of human industry. The various military bands perform the National Anthems of their several countries. Here is heard "The Russian Hymn"—there that of Austria, yonder the French republican air "Mourir Pour La Patrie," "The East India War March," "The Chinese Hong Gong," "The Polish Cracoviense," and "The Spanish Cahcouca." Anon "Yankee Doodle" breaks upon the ear. At length one tremendous shout bursts forth, and the gladly welcomed nations join in the English National Anthem, "God Save the Queen," performed first time in double counterpoint simultaneously with "The March of all Nations," (the one being in ¾ time, and the other in 2-4 time;) and secondly, by the full Orchestra, accompanied by the peals of bells and salutes of artillery.
