Mr. J. Sedgwick's Metropolitan Academy and Gymnasium, Nos. 93 and 95 6th-av., near Washington-square and 8th-st. The third term of the academical year of this well-known institution is now commencing. What we propose to do in the first place in the Academy, is to teach intelligently all the branches taught in the higher schools of this country. Secondly, to conduct, as an indispensable element of the training a systematic course of Gymnastic Exercises, for the true development of the bodily powers, that in the place of restless, restless, timid pupils, with dwarfed and unprofited bodies, stooping forms and sallow skins depressed and vacant minds, unintelligent, listerless eyes, their very constitutions possessing tendencies which are strengthening day by day, and will ultimately lead to consumption, or the equally terrible disease, dyspepsia; we may have pupils just the reverse—manly in form and bearing, erect, deep chested, straight limbed bodies, keen eyes, fair-colored skin, and in movement agile as the leopard. Such boys have no difficulty in studying and acquiring languages, mathematics, or anything else to which they are directed. They feel they have the power to accomplish. One visit to the institution is worth more than a dozen pages of explanation. To such a visit he carries conviction. One gentleman said (and we could fill pages with similar expressions) that "the money paid here by him was but a slight per centage on what he had heretofore paid for medicines and physicians' fees; and the happiness and sprightliness now reigning in his home made it as Eden, as contrasted with its former hospital-like appearance."
TERMS—In the Academy, (all pupils of which have the Gymnasium free,) according to the studies pursued: In Gymnasium proper—for four weeks $5; for eleven weeks $12; for forty four weeks $25. Self Defense—$12 for the first course, $10 for each succeeding one. Fencing—$20 for the first course, $16 for each succeeding one.

A Thrilling Romance, founded on the Life of Ellen Jewett.
FRANK RIVERS:
OR, THE
DANGERS OF THE TOWN.
BY PROFESSOR J. H. INGRAHAM,
Author of "Lafitte," "Captain Kyd," "The Handsome Cigar Girl," etc., etc. Complete in one octavo volume. Price 25 cents.
This work is founded upon an incident of comparatively recent occurrence, the details of which are probably fresh in the memory of most of our readers. But, though many persons were made familiar with the unholy career and untimely end of Ellen Jewett, through the columns of the daily press, few are acquainted with the early life of this unfortunate and beautiful victim to man's unpowered passions. It happened, however, that the author was enabled to gain access to sources of information in regard to this lovely girl, from which he gleaned sufficient incident to work up one of the most romantic novels we have ever read, possessing, as it does, the charm of actual occurrence. The work here presented gives a full description of Ellen's first error and fatal visit to the college-rooms of her seducer, her arrival in New-York, extravagant life, and the final desertion of her pretended husband. From thence it traces her descent in a course of vice, till she succeeds in corrupting Frank Rivers, who by a chain of the most remarkable coincidences, is subjected to a trial for murder, and narrowly escapes pay ng the forfeit of his life for an offense of which, no doubt, committed by him to whom she owed her first crime, and for which she so suddenly paid the penalty. It is a thrilling story of woman's frailty and man's treachery.
There is nothing in this true history that can offend the most fastidious. For sale by all Booksellers and Periodical Agents.
