THE MISER'S HEIR; OR, THE YOUNG MILLIONAIRE. By P. Hamilton Meyers, author of "Bell Brandon," "Ellen Wellesley: Or, the Siege of Fort Stanwix," "The Emigrant Squire," etc. etc. Complete in one volume. Price 50 cents in paper cover, or 75 cents in cloth.
"The scene of the present story is laid in the City of New-York, ere that metropolis had encircled within her broad arms the extent of territory which now marks her limits. Fortunes were made for men in those days while they were sleeping, in the rapid increase of the value of real estate, and the author makes one of those vast accumulations the groundwork of a plot of no common order. The time runs through some fifteen or sixteen years, embracing the boyhood and early manhood of the hero. He has vividly portrayed the baneful effects of avarice—the deep dyed villainy, the bartering of soul necessary to gratify that passion by dishonest means—the one engrossing idea leading the miser, ignis-fatuus like, step by step, till at last he sees that for which he has toiled and sinned, at the very moment of fancied possession, fade like a vision from his grasp. He has depicted unrewarded toil struggling for an honest existence; but, while he has drawn a contrast between worthy poverty, and the unblessed wealth of him who accumulates it for himself alone, he has not drawn from the portions of overgrown riches those degrading pictures so frequently found in modern literature, which shock the sensibilities, while they may not fail to interest us."

Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM & Co. respectfully invite the attention of the trade to the valuable property herein described, which is believed to be worthy of the attention of all engaged in or contemplating the publishing business.
These attractive and popular works and the contracts with the distinguished authors of the American portion of them, at least really be surrendered with great reluctance, for they comprise a large number of the most desirable books in the market, and have proved to be permanently valuable and increasing in sale as a part of the standard literature of the age, essential to every good library.
The cost of the stereotype plates, copyrights and cuts here offered has been nearly $100,000, exclusive of the printed stock; and the vendors honestly believe that the whole are at this moment actually worth, to publishers who can give them proper attention, a considerable advance on the cost. The undersigned are obliged to confess that many of these books have not had justice done to their merits, as they have been too much crowded by each other, and too much restricted by limited facilities for so wide a field as they embrace.
Intending to devote more particular personal attention to their Magazine—"PUTNAM'S MONTHLY"—and to the publication of the works of two or three authors, and anxious to be relieved from the responsibilities of an extended business, for which various circumstances render them disinclined, the undersigned have decided, somewhat suddenly, to dispose of this entire lot without reserve. They are aware that the notice is too short, and that a forced sale by so eminent publisher must have an injurious effect on this; but they still feel a confidence that the well known character and value of these works will secure from their brethren in the trade such an appreciation as will prevent the sacrifice from being too severe.
