THEODORE HOOK'S CRACK NOVEL.—Published This Morning:

NED MUSGRAVE;
Or, THE MOST UNFORTUNATE MAN IN THE WORLD.
By THEODORE HOOK.
Price, 50 Cents.

"This delightful Novel is the most popular, as beyond doubt it is the best, of all Theodore Hook's admirable works. The author's amusing but graphic style, intermingled with wit and wisdom, greets the reader from the first page to the last. The work is remarkable for its racy humor, its sound philosophy, the felicity of its illustrations, and the delicacy of its satire. The character of 'The Most Unfortunate Man in the World' is drawn from life, and throughout true to nature; in whatever position he is introduced, the author's pencil has reproduced the scene with vivid exactness and effect. There is something in the work to suit readers of every humor, and we promise all who peruse 'Ned Musgrave,' they will find it a world of practical wisdom and a treasury of the richest fun."

THE POETRY OF GERMANY—Consisting of Selections from upward of seventy of the most celebrated Poets, translated into English verse, with the original text on the opposite page. By Alfred Baskerville. 1 vol. 12mo., 663 pp.; cloth, gilt, $1 75.

"* * The lovers of German literature will heartily welcome an American edition of this beautiful volume. Nor is its interest confined to those whose knowledge of the great German masterpieces enables them to perceive its merits as a translation. Everywhere it will be greeted by the readers of poetry as a rare addition to their sources of mental enjoyment. It is composed of selections from more than seventy of the most eminent German Poets, translated into English verse, with the text of the original on the opposite page. The student who has made some proficiency in the German language, will here find an invaluable means of gaining fresh familiarity with its peculiar constructions, and at the same time acquire a greater degree of insight into the depth and power of its best poetical productions. The volume embraces specimens from the middle of the last century to the present time, arranged according to the writer's priority of birth, commencing with Hagedorn, (born 1708) and closing with Redwitz, (born 1823.) Copious selections, of course, are made from Goethe, Schiller, Wieland, Ruckert, Tieck, Uhland, and other long-cherished names, while the translations from several poets of a quite recent date will probably bring them for the first time to the attention of many readers. Old favorites, at which many transistors both in this country and in England have tried their hands, are here reproduced, giving ample opportunity for those who are curious in such matters to indulge in critical comparisons. Indeed, many of the verses have such a familiar movement, that it would not be surprising if some idle Dryasdust, with more leisure then ourselves, should find numerous coincidences between this version and the rendering already given by some of our own scholars. But this would not detract from the merit of the translations, which in general are remarkable for their literal fidelity, as well as for their sweetness and ease of expression, and the freshness with which they preserve the spirit of the original." [N. Y. Tribune.

"* * We have looked over the translations and find them marked by fidelity and diligence." [N. E. Eve. Post.

"* * A storehouse of gems for the lovers of poetry." [Home Journal.

The beautiful volume is eminently calculated to become the favorite gift-book of the year, and will be found an inexhaustibly interesting fireside companion in every family.

It will be sent to any address within 3,000 miles by mail prepaid, on receipt of $1 75, by F. W. CHRISTERN, No. 763 Broadway, or by the Publisher, RUDOLPH GARRIGUE, No. 172 Fulton st., New-York.

VINCENT NOLTE'S FIFTY YEARS IN BOTH HEMISPHERES:

Or, REMINISCENCES OF A MERCHANT'S LIFE.

1 vol., 12mo., cloth, price $1 25.

"This is one of the most extraordinary autobiographies ever published, and contains some of the richest and most amusing gossip—the largest amount of personal anecdote and reminiscence—ever packed between two covers." [Yankee Blade, Boston.

"Nolte was a great man in his day, a dashing speculator, familiar with all the schemes and maneuvers of commerce on the most extensive scale. He has figured in every part of the world. In no place did he play a more prominent part than in this city, where his career was a most stirring and varied one—fighting duels, speculating in cotton, dabbling in political intrigues, quarreling with banks, fishing in the lines under Jackson, and then trying to unlay the old Hero for some cotton bales which he alleges were appropriated to the defense of the city." [New-Orleans Delta.

"A work containing a vast deal of information, more of anecdote, and a vast deal of interesting biographical memoirs. The whole is readably and agreeably conveyed." [Quebec Mercury.

"For a lively, entertaining biography, filled with information of real value and interest to the American reader, we place this work in the foremost file." [Phil. Register.

"As a reflection of real life, a book stamped with a strong personal character, and filled with unique details of a large experience of private and public interest, we unhesitatingly call attention to it as one of the most noteworthy productions of the day." [N. Y. Churchman.

"To all whose personal recollections run back to the time of which this author writes, his book will prove intensely interesting, and the younger generation will find in it much to amuse and something to instruct." [Portland Transcript.

"We have not read within a time much longer than we care to name such an amusing book. Its variety and discreteness is one of its principal charms." [New-York Express.

"Many distinguished characters figure in this volume, including Burr, Hamilton, Jackson, Biddle, &c. Scandal, intrigue and adventure are the author's especial delight, and his sojourn in this country, as well as in some countries of Europe, appears to have supplied him with a large fund upon which to draw in the production of this book." [Boston Journal.

"It is an autobiography; apparently truthful, yet marvelous for the varied incidents that make up the recital. Twenty-five years ago the name of Vincent Nolte, of New-Orleans, was as familiar to the American ear as that of Astor, Girard or Biddle. With some spice of vanity, perhaps, he presents facts of the times and anecdotes of men that may, not inaptly, be said to daguerreotype the last half century." [Worcester Palladium.

"His life has been a most eventful one—full of strange incidents; and his book—containing, as it does, much useful information—historical, commercial, artistic, besides being freely interspersed with anecdote and gossip—is as interesting, and more instructive, than one-half of the romances of the day. Truth is stranger than fiction,' and always will be." [Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia.

"There may be some—there cannot be many—who have never heard of Nolte, a man whose life was more like a fever than anything else, and who passed through more changes and chances, and saw more of the world than half the people in it. This eccentric and busy being here gives us the history of his ups and downs, clothed in such language and salted with so much humor that all who read the book must, per force, be delighted with it. We have rarely taken up a more entertaining volume, and lend it our hearty indorsement." [Buffalo Express.

"The individual whose reminiscences are contained in this volume is certainly, in his way, one of the remarkables of the age and the world. He seems to have lived everywhere, to have known everybody, to have had a hand in everything, and to have been the subject of every sort of experience incident to mortal man." [Albany Argus.

"The great charm of Mr. Nolte's book consists in the extraordinary changes through which his career led him, the number and variety of personages to whom we are introduced, the ease and vivacity of his style, and the satire frankness and cordiality of his nature." [Boston Traveller.

"This is, without any exception, one of the most singularly entertaining and readable books which we have for a long time come across." [Home Journal.

"There has not appeared in the literary world, since Le Sage set Gil Blas afloat upon an interminable ocean of popularity, a more spicy collection of the odds and ends of a checkered life." [Louisville Journal.

"This book presents the autobiography of one of the most remarkable men of which we have any knowledge. His was a commercial life, and yet his history embraces every variety of scene and incident. It covers seventy years, and groups the principal actors and events on both sides of the water, all the time." [Christian Register, Philadelphia.

"The ups and downs of the author's life, his buoyant disposition, his happy spirit of contentment under the most diversified circumstances, and the capival manner he has of telling a story, enchain the reader's attention and keep him absorbed in the exciting details with which the book abounds." [New York Day Book.

"His reminiscences really cover nearly seventy years, though he calls it "Fifty Years," and a good part of his life was passed in this country. This book is certainly one of the most interesting of the season." [Boston Daily Advertiser.

"Our old merchants and politicians will find it very amusing, and it will excite vivid reminiscenses of men and things forty years ago. We might criticise the hap-hazard and dare-devil spirit of the author, but the rackness of his anecdotes is the result of those very defects." [Boston Transcript.

"His autobiography presents a spicy variety of incident and adventure, and a great deal of really useful and interesting information, all the more acceptable for the profusion of anecdote and piquant scandal with which it is interspersed." [N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

"Not the least interesting portion of the work, to us here, is the narrative of Nolte's intercourse with our great men, and his piquant and occasionally ill-natured notice of their faults and foibles." [N. Y. Herald.

"It derives its principal interest from the piquant personalities with which it is seasoned. These will be eagerly devoured by the lovers of gossip, while the immediate friends of the parties in question would be tempted to fling the writer alive, even at his tough old age, should they be so lucky as to get him into their hands." [N. Y. Tribune.

"As an amusing narrative it would be difficult to find its superior; but the book has peculiar interest from the freedom with which the author shows up our American notorieties of the past forty years." [Courier.

"It is a vivid chronicle of varied and remarkable experiences, and will serve to rectify the errors which too often pass among men as veritable history." [Evening Post.

"But to appreciate the book to its fullest extent one must get it and read it. Having once commenced the task, we will guarantee that no man of common sense, or at all acquainted with the mercantile history of the country, will leave it unfinished." [N. Y. Atlas.

"He is perfectly at home everywhere—whether gazing at the great Napoleon, as he comes dashing into Leghorn, or sailing ashore from a wreck on the coast of Florida on a chicken coop; and yet there is that spice in his personalities, and an eccentricity in his style which must give the work a rapid and (we think) extensive sale." [Times.
