Ridder's Gas Regulator saves twenty-five per cent with a better light: RICHMOND, Aug. 18, 1854.
My engagements prevented me from experimenting with your Regulator before this week. I had it put up and so arranged that I could show the pressure of the works on the burners, which vary from 2 to 2½ inches. I made some weights of lead and weighted it to see that I brought the pressure to 6-10 the pressure on the street mains 2½ in. and with 6 of your 4 feet burners under the street pressure the cocks turned off so that they would not perceptibly blow. I consumed 12 cubic feet in 25 minutes. I then put the Regulator on and opened the cocks full, same number of burners, burning the same time, I consumed 9 cubic feet, showing a saving of 25 per cent. The experiment to me was very satisfactory; the lights burned very steadily. I could not perceive any difference in the pressure or flame whether one or six of the lights were burning. From what I have seen I would have no hesitation in recommending its use. C. CAMPBELL, Supt. of City Gas Works.

NEW LATIN SCHOOL BOOK. D. APPLETON & Co., Nos. 346 and 348 Broadway, PUBLISH THIS DAY
QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFUS'S LIFE AND EXPLOITS OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT. Edited and Illustrated with English Notes by Wm. H. Crosby. 1 vol., 12mo. Price $1.
"It is an undoubted, though unaccountable fact, that Quintus Curtius's history of the exploits of Alexander the Great, is a work almost unheard of in the Academies and Colleges of the United States, while in England, and more especially on the Continent, it holds a high place in the estimation of classical instructors. The interesting character of its subjects, the elegance of its style, and the pureness of its moral sentiments, ought surely to place it on an elevation as high, if not higher, than the Commentaries of Cæsar, or the Histories of Sallust. The editor would remark that he puts forth the edition of Quintus Curtius with all confidence, that, if a writer so interesting in his subject, and so captivating in his styles, shall once gain a foothold in our American course of classical study, his own merits will suffice to retain him there."

FRANK LESLIE, No. 6 John-st., New-York, and all Booksellers in the United States.

WE OPEN IT AT RANDOM; our eye runs along its closely printed pages; we are at once arrested by a fine thought—a grand image—a rich felicity of language. We go on spell bound by the power of him who has cast his whole soul into the fervid lines; we finish the piece, and then we turn to the commencement of the volume—we find the name of Gerald Massey upon the title page—a few pages of preface written in a manly tone of modest self appreciation—and then we go from page to page, admiringly and wonderingly, till we close the volume.
