GABRIELLE;
OR,
PICTURES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.
By C. SPINDLER, Author of "The Jew," &c.
Price, 50 Cents.

In GABRIELLE the reader will become acquainted with the Count of the unfortunate Louis XVI.—with the gigantic Mirabeau—the terrible Danton—the enigmatical Robespierre—the monster Marat—and some of those illustrious Generals who supported the cause of Freedom against the combinations of Princes and Aristocrats. He will, moreover, have the pleasure of tracing the fortunes of a hero who fought with Washington and Lafayette for the Independence of America and of being almost a witness, we might say, of those great achievements by which the supernatural genius of Napoleon astonished the world.

We confidently predict that the reader, whether a brave man or chivalrous youth, a sedate matron or a blushing maid, will admit that the Author of this work is worthy of his high reputation.

HUMANITY IN THE CITY.
By the Rev. EDWIN H. CHAPIN.
Elegantly bound in cloth, price $1.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From The Christian Ambassador, New York.

"We know not how any one can read these pages without being charmed with the style, and carried onward and upward by the irresistible tide of human sympathy and noble sentiment that sweeps through them."

From The Christian Secretary, Hartford, Conn.

"They are eloquent and timely essays."

From The Daily Times, Hartford, Conn.

"There is a depth and strong tenderness in each of these discourses, and they are eloquent with the earnest force of truth."

From The Atlas, Boston.

"The author of these discourses is a divine well known and esteemed, both as a philanthropist and an orator, yet we doubt if he has ever delivered or published anything that is so well worthy of his high reputation as the contents of this volume. This is, we know, high praise, but does not seem to us higher than these discourses deserve."

From The Republican and Argus, Baltimore, Md.

"Mr. Chapin, with the true spirit of Christianity, seeks to lift the burdens from the poor, and to breathe into their minds the consolations of the Gospel, while with a graphic pen and a burning eloquence he paints their sorrows and degradation, as so many claims upon the benefaction of the wealthy."
Olive Branch, Boston.

"They are written with great ability."
Christian Observer, Philadelphia.

"The author wields a graphic pen."
American, Baltimore, Md.

"It strongly enforces the valuable precept given by our Savior to his disciples, 'to love their neighbors as themselves.'"

LA DAME AUX CAMELIAS.
CAMILLE;
Or, THE FATE OF A COURTESAN.
A true phase of Parisian Life.
By ALEX DUMAS.
With an original preface by Jules Janin.
Price, 37½ cents.

This splendid production caused so much excitement in Paris at the time of its publication, that Jules Janin says in his preface.

"The book had a great success, but some readers, shaking off their first impression, observed that the 'Lady with the Camelias' was not a mere romance—that she had lived and loved recently—that the drama was not imaginary, but a tragedy in private life—the wounds of which were yet new and bleeding. Then persons became anxious to know about the name of the heroine—her position in society—her fortune and ornaments and rumors of her amours. The public anxious to know everything and which, in fact, knows all, learned the details, and the book was again read; so that, the truth being recognized, the interest of the recital was enhanced. Now, as by an extraordinary chance this book, printed without pretense, as a mere romance scarcely destined to live a day, is reprinted with all the honors of an universally accepted book. Read it, and in all the details you will see the touching story in which this man, so extraordinarily gifted, has written elegy and drama with so many tears, such success and happiness."

The beautiful heroine Camille is now as well known through the length and breadth of our land as she ever was in France—the work having been dramatized, and the character personified by that first of living actresses, Julia Davenport, and performed with unbounded success in all parts of the country. None can doubt the intense interest of the novel who have seen her representation of the beautiful girl, who, brilliant in beauty and wealth, surrounded with a crowd of admirers all desirous of her love, and from whom she hardly knows which one to choose, seems indeed the spoiled child of fortune. But, alas, in the rich fairness of her cheek lurks a foe which ever seeks for its prey the young and the beautiful. The hectic flush, the hacking cough so rife on her lips. We see her, once so fleshed in youth and beauty, grow gradually weaker, though still lovely till, in full contrast fastens upon her prey, and she dies, deserted by all the crowd of admirers who once basked in the blaze of her beauty. And even to her, on whom she had poured out the richest treasures of her love, absent, and only arriving to be with which her eyes were closed in death. It is truly a most thrilling and effective story, and brought out with great power.

Who Wrote
HAGAR THE MARTYR?
WHO IS NOT THE AUTHORESS
OF
FASHION AND FAMINE?

MESSRS. BUNCE & BROTHERS, in New-York, have recently, and in magnificently stilled and correspondingly cheap, at 62½ a very school assumption, and are now, to a remarkable spirit of most noble indignation, doing all in their power to sustain it down. The assumption is that the authoress of "Fashion and Famine," Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, has been removed to be the author of "Hagar the Martyr." Now we have given Bunce & Brothers no reason whatever for assuming any conclusion of the sort, and, in looking over the contemporary notices of "Hagar the Martyr," which have appeared in the public prints, we can find no authority on which to base such an apprehension. The authoress has, with two exceptions, been stated, in these notices referred to, to be Mrs. H. Marion Stephens, and these two exceptions were The Boston Times and Transcript, both of which papers spoke of Mrs Stephens as the Mrs. Stephens of Boston, and not Mrs Ann S. Stephens of New-York, whom we are justified in saying, neither of the editors alluded to had in their minds at the time they penned their notices.

But, supposing the public should confound the names of the two ladies, it is not, therefore, at all uncertain that Mrs. Ann S. Stephens would be highly complimented by the mistake. Nay, it is absolutely reasonable that she will, or ought to see, for if we mistake not, the book published by Bunce & Brothers, under the title of "Fashion and Famine," has a singular affinity, in all respects, to one previously and positively known as "Filmore and Palmer; or, The Sexton's Girl." Mrs. Stephens—that is Mrs. H. Marion Stephens—is no plagiarist, but the authoress of an entirely original work and, in this respect, would not likely by parties interested, be wilfully placed on the level of a mere compiler and patcher-up of old and exploded materials. It is therefore, under the circumstances, entirely unnecessary and unpalled for, on the part of Messrs. Bunce & Brothers, to notify the public that Mrs. H. Marion Stephens is not the authoress of "Fashion and Famine." That lady has fame enough independently of what she would derive from such a relationship; and in evidence of this we roll from a very numerous and elaborated series of criticisms, the following brief and unsubbed extracts:

"The plot is excellent, the ideas
