"A WORK of GREAT POWER."—SECOND EDITION NOW READY.
PAUL FERROLL.
A Tale, by the author of "IX. Poems by V." From the 4th London Edition. 12mo., cloth. $1.
"Paul Ferroll stands almost alone as a fiction of the day. Possessing all the elements of a striking effect, written with a power unhappily too rare in present light literature, singularly original in conception managed in plot and general arrangement with an art which we had begun almost to fear was lost, and admirably adapted to enchain the reader while it satisfies it—this book when once read, such a circumstance as forgetting is hardly possible." [National Ægis, Worcester.
"This tale is intensely interesting. Indeed, we have rarely read a work of fiction that equaled it in the power of fastening the reader's attention, and making a lasting impression upon his mind." [N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.
"A work of great power, originality of style, plot and character and of intense interest." [Boston Atlas.
"The startling contrasts which are made to appear in the tale fix vividly the attention of the reader; and the story is one which once read will never be forgotten." [Boston Evening Traveller.

A DECIDED HIT.—A SENSATION
CREATED
By
MRS. STEPHENS'S
ILLUSTRATED NEW MONTHLY.
READ
THE OPINION OF THE NEW-YORK EXPRESS:
"Mrs. Stephens's 'Illustrated New Monthly' makes its debut to-day. An examination of it will show the tasteful reader that, in point of form and appearance, it is actually the most beautiful of any publication of the kind issued, whether in this country or even in England. Its shape of page is a neat quarto, with two wide columns of reading, beautifully printed, the type and paper being equal to those used in the best book-work executed in the United States. The pleasing impression it conveys is greatly aided by the very graceful, taking and artistic design of its cover, the beautiful faces of its typography, and the truly superior spirit and execution of its illustrations. Taken in connection with the marked tact and skill exhibited in the interest of its eminently popular reading matter and its unrivaled cheapness (twelve and a-half cents per number), it strikes us as without question, the happiest emanation of the kind issued here.
"The evident aim in it is to be specially a magazine of ideality. The illustrations will be exclusively wood cuts, contributed by our best artists as the more studied efforts of their aspirations and imaginations, rather than the usual journeywork jobs of the current periodicals. The designs of the present number are chiefly done by Dallas, and exhibit a striking vigor and freshness. 'The Falls of the Minnehaha' is one of the best and boldest sketches we have seen executed here of the kind. The wood cuts, we are glad to learn, will not be confined to original designs, as it is intended to make the 'Illustrated New Monthly' a popular repertoire for the most taking pictures from all accessible sources. The literary matter is 'copyright,' opening with a new novel, 'Lost Jewels,' by Mrs Stephens. In accordance with one of the aims of the periodical, which looks to the increase and diffusion of romantic associations with localities of American scenery, by means of pictures, tales and poems, the scenes of 'Lost Jewels' is located on the Hudson above the city, at Weehawken, on the Palisades, and among the Knickerbocker associations on the other side, above Harlem River. The Indian Summer time, some striking introductory delineations of character, a startling adventure, and a very dissolving passage between a most promising pair of lovers open up at once the pages of a novel of intense interest. Another tale, 'Love in '76,' introduces some striking scenes in a domestic history during the Revolution. It is by the author of the admired and very successful novel, 'Blanche Dearwood.' Its interest opens up at once, and is borne along upon the current of a brisk, effective and dramatic dialogue, into a thick and stirring succession of incidents, exhibiting a marked skillfulness in the true aim of romance—the art of kindling a curious knowledge of historic manners and characteristics with the life and interest of a vivid creative imagination. Several short tales and sketches, some of which are illustrated, are also given, together with a few tasteful poems, of which 'The Maiden's Confession' will be admired for its combination of deep, passionate feeling, and the rich suffusion of its ideality."
12½ cents monthly. $1 50 per annum.
