COCKBURN'S MEMORIALS.
D. APPLETON & CO.,
Nos 346 and 348 Broadway,
WILL PUBLISH ON WEDNESDAY
MEMORIALS OF HIS TIME.
BY HENRY COCKBURN.
One volume, 12mo., 442 pages. $1 25.
From the Foreign Correspondent of The N. Y. Tribune.
"The most valuable as well as most readable book lately published in this country is Lord Cockburn's Memorials of His Own Time. The fine old Judge (into whose court I went with Aytoun the last time I was in 'The gray metropolis of the North,' and whose face, as he gave a quiet nod from the bench to my companion, struck me as full of wit and heart) tells the story of the Scottish capital for about two generations. He was an intimate friend of Mackenzie, the 'Man of Feeling,' whose fame belongs to the days of Blair and Dr Johnson. He knew Scott when Scott was a rising young fellow; and he records the intellectual and social life of Edinburgh during the most brilliant period it ever knew. Anecdotes, sketches of life and character, pictures of vanished manners and great men—all that belongs to the social history of the country—are found in his pages. But what is more important is that Edinburgh is not likely to have such a period again; and that, even if she has other Cockburns, she will not supply them with such good stuff for other Memorials. Edinburgh is becoming provincialized—falling away in the brighter, all-pervading light of this mighty London. The Scottish men of genius are here, and the Scottish aristocracy, with scarcely an exception; and Edinburgh is a dull, quiet country town, inhabited by lawyers and professors. The most amusing and intellectual circle is the very one to which such of the Blackwood men as are in the town belong. And the place (independent of that) is disagreeable to men who have been used to London, from the severity of its Presbyterian character, which is several shades darker and duller than what is called 'respectability' in London. In London, however, a man can do what he likes from its vastness and its numbers; and I am sure you that the greatest potentates feel it a relief to get into it, and be free from the observation of little neighborhoods. Read Cockburn's Memorials, then, for bright, lively sketches of the days when Edinburgh was a capital—when the best Scotsmen were to be found here, talking their best—and when there was just enough antagonism between Whig and Tory to keep intellectual life awake and in motion—when a Lord Cockburn was a Whig or a Lockhart said his to rowing his Memories of Jeffrey in The Quarterly, an Edinburgh Whig of the top flight! but he does full justice to the Tories, too."
