Additional Names of the Killed, Wounded, Missing and Prisoners.

From a Correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune.

HARRISON'S LANDING, July 7, 1862.

In the course of two days hard work I am enabled to collect and forward to you upward of a thousand of the names of the killed, wounded, missing and taken prisoners, in the late retreat from before Richmond to the present position of the army on the James River. I collected many of the names of the persons themselves in the general hospital, and the rest were given me by their wounded comrades.

The army is certainly in a much healthier situation here than in the late Golgotha at Fair Oaks, for I know of no other name to give that place, with the continual stench arising from the dead bodies and the poisonous malaria, sowing the seeds of death and disease among our poor soldiers, who, week after week, have been exposed to them.

It is rather difficult at present to find the different corps, divisions, and brigades, to say nothing of the regiments. The other day I wanted to find Keyes's Corps, and after about an hour's inquiry and tramping through the woods, I at last gave up the hope of finding it, and returned to where I set out. The wounded are removed as soon as operated upon, or their wounds dressed, and sent to Fortress Monroe on boats, from which point they are sent by the Medical Director to some place North, where they can receive proper attention and care.

Provisions for both man and beast are beginning to come in a little faster, and Harrison's Landing begins to look like a second White House.

The following are additional names of the killed, wounded, missing, and taken prisoners, of our men in the fights of the recent retreat from Fair Oaks to the present position of the army on the James River:
