THE AMERICAN QUESTION.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, June 17, 1862.

Government is no longer able to deny that the French troops instead of taking possession of Puebla, May 5, were checked, not to say beaten, May 10, in an engagement with the Mexicans this side of that city. It takes measures for immediately pushing forward re-enforcements that were to have been sent only in October. There is great new bustle at Toulon, and even at Brest they say—almost more, some suspicious folks think, than the mere Mexican Expedition, even with its new exigencies, seems to call for. Cochin China doubtless offers a better explanation than the United States of this increased activity in the imperial navy-yards. The little check to the French army before Puebla, the embarrassing and possibly dangerous position of Gen. Lorencez, have now drawn public attention to the Mexican Expedition as fully as it has been hitherto turned to any of the absorbing European Questions. The Expedition certainly has not much gained in popularity as yet by being looked at, but it is fast gaining popular support if not favor. If it be Napoleon's policy to turn Mexico, under the name of a protected Republic or Monarchy, into a French colony, he could have invented no surer means of procuring its adoption by the French nation, than the sacrifice at the outset of half the inadequate force sent to Mexico to inaugurate it. The St. Nazaire mail steamer that brings the last news from Vera Cruz, brings no official reports from Gen. Lorencez, his communications with that port being intercepted by guerrilla bands. (Of course (of French patriotic course), nothing is to be done now but to reopen these communications, and continue the military road to Mexico, no matter at what cost. One of the ministers without portfolio told the Committee on the Budget the other day that Government did not purpose to call for extra appropriations for this Mexican business, which it meant to have done with before the year closed. Debate on the Budget has now begun in the Corps Legislatif; but you can easily understand how the news brought by the steamer Louisiana to St. Nazaire the other day will be like to restrain the independent censure of the Mexican Expedition, which Government would have heard enough of had the debate opened ten days ago. And while the Liberals and most sensibly economic Government men, in and out of the Legislature, disapproving as much as ever the Franco-Mexican policy, feel now obliged from patriotism to materially support it, it is to be noted that this policy meets on the whole the approval of the purely reactionary Church party. This last-named party was, up to the time of the Italian war, as efficient a supporter of Government as the Napoleonist party proper. Its abstention, growing ever since that date, has forced Napoleon into a sort of alliance with the Liberal element in the nation, to whose growing influence he has been in turn obliged to yield more, probably, than was strictly agreeable to his autocratic tastes. It is not a quite extravagant hypothesis that, in addition to the conjectured motives of his Majesty's unexplained policy respecting Mexico, indicated in my last letter, there may lie in the secret cabinet of his mind, this one of playing off his new Liberal friends against his late Reactionary friends, of substituting Mexican intervention for Roman intervention. This present, like that old passing intervention, is hostile to a Republic, and favorable to the Church.

I need not seek a rhetorical form of transition from the Franco-Mexican to the Franco-American question—from Mexican intervention to American mediation. The diplomatic like the geographical states of the case, are conterminous, divided by a line of hardly appreciable breadth, whatever thickness some congenital brains may attribute to it.

The reports of the sessions of Houses of Lords and of Commons last Friday evening were carried to you along with the last Friday afternoon's letter of your Paris reporter. "There is no intention on the part of her Majesty's Government to mediate at the present moment," said Earl Russell in the Lords. "We have at present no intention of offering mediation between the contending parties," said Lord Palmerston in the Commons. Identical, prepared answers to questions both Ministers knew were to be asked, whose common, significant implications are—the contending parties are irrevocably separated, but the opportune moment for friendly mediation as to their future national line has not yet arrived. That is what the two answers mean. The italics are—I was about to write, mine—the work of all French Government organs, from the Moniteur up or down, and of many others here who would gladly play other than Government tunes. Lord Palmerston furthermore said, that the English had received no communication respecting mediation from the French Government. In so saying, Lord Palmerston made a statement of undoubted literal truth that probably was not even intended to convey an impression of absolute truth. All that he said, all that he meant to say let us hope, for his aged soul's sake, was that no formal diplomatic notes had lately passed between the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the English Foreign Office having combined mediation in American affairs for their subject matter. To suppose that new conversations, not unimportant, because informal, have not lately taken place between Persigny and Flahault on one side, and Earl Russell on the other, between Earl Cowley and M. Thouvenel, is to suppose that these statesmen and Louis Napoleon, gray-headed and bald-headed practitioners in statecraft, are sunk to the infantile naive, heedlessness of second childhood.

Perhaps our silly anglophobes will finally learn that it will be our American duty, and pleasure, and wise policy, so soon as we have "crushed out" the ninety days' Rebellion, to thrash France as well as England.

Meantime, clamlantic spectators of our American civil war—not only spectators of the governing classes, Palmerstons, Napoleons, and that sort, smiling content in the dress circle, in pleasant anticipation of tragic denouement to our republican drama—but sympathising spectators, and even generously partisan claque, and (more important than either), calm historical critics—hopefully, despairingly, studiously watching its drift—are more than ever inclined to predict separation as its only possible conclusion.

It is not pleasant to your reporter to set this down in black on white; but the eyesight and bending overbear his wish and will. Struggle with them as you will, the fate remain. These intensely significant facts remain, to wit: that all our European friends, all European friends of humanity and right and justice, on our side; and all our European enemies, enemies of republics and democracies and capacity of men as men to judge for and govern themselves, on the other side, argue from common premises that we furnish. And the North, our Union Government does not furnish premises so favorable (seemingly at least) to the argument of our friends as to the argument of our enemies.

To take a late instance, a peculiarly representative instance, in proof: Two or three days ago the Siècle newspaper—the most widely circulated newspaper in France or on the European continent—put these questions to La Patrie, the most widely circulated of the three semi-official Government journals in France:

"Do you not believe that the question of Slavery is the real cause of the American conflict, and for its solution do you not think that the triumph of the North is preferable to recognition of the South?"

"No," says the Patrie. "The triumph of the North would not insure, as the recognition of the South would not prevent Emancipation. . . .

So far from the success of the North permitting Emancipation of the black race, note that Northern States (the Patrie says, with willing, malicious falsity, the Northern States) have Slaves they do not liberate; that the Washington Cabinet has hitherto disarmed all the Generals who have proclaimed Emancipation; and that the free blacks of the North are objects there of general contempt and gross ill-treatment."

There is patent falsehood by implication, if not direct, in these few lines of the Patrie; but how correct it to our benefit? Will, do, you New-Yorkers correct it by permitting Capt. Robert Small of the ex-C. S. A. steamer Planter to ride in one of your omnibuses, to dine at one of your hotel tables, to worship a common God in a brood-tile pew or one of your churches? And, let alone social position, do you, dare you grant to Capt. Robert Small (epidermically black), who has done yeoman's service to our cause—do you, dare you class this exceptional man in the order of military merit that belongs, as a property, to the first-come, incompetent, drunken, Union-with-Slavery Captain of any one of the numberless common-place companies of the army? Do you or do you not? Will you or won't you? On the response depend the gravest results.

I referred in my last to the unsuccessful defense made by the Débats against the Constitutionnel of our lately-voted law of confiscation. The Débats defended it, first, on the ground that it was only a form of arriving at slave emancipation. It then defended it on two other equally untenable grounds. The argument of our enemy was potently triumphant over the argument of our friend—the argument of our enemy resting irrefutably on the letter and spirit of that illogical law, and on the reports of its discussion in our Congress. Even the official Moniteur cannot refrain from applying the simplest test of French logic to that remarkable law: "By an inexplicable want of logic, the Chamber [House of Representatives] that had voted the bill for confiscating property, refused to emancipate the slaves belonging to inhabitants of the South engaged in the rebellion. It is plain that the last of these two bills was more just than the first." Plainer than any conceivable combination of pike-staves to an impartial observer.

Possibly the lately changed tone of this same official Moniteur is worth our notice. The Moniteur is sub-edited by M. Prosper Merimee, Academician and Senator. Its editor in chief is Louis Napoleon, responsible for its bulletin and "American correspondence," as Abraham Lincoln is responsible for the proclamations of his Generals.

That Gen. Halleck's ignorance of what has become of a hostile army, of whose numbers—varying from 80,000 to 200,000 men, he was ignorant—is excusable, coming naturally from his persistence in shutting out from his lines the only possible black reporters of news of the enemy's whereabout and whatabout. But that he should shut these black reporters of news from the enemy's camp out of his own, is infinitely more inexplicable to the European mind than that he should shut out from his own camp white reporters of what is and is not going on there.

"Live and learn." Only under these queer, oppressive conditions, is there not danger that the breath of our national life will be squeezed out of us before we come to learn the saving doctrine that a democratic republic fighting for its existence must fight for democracy and existence—without reference to color.

We think that we are twenty millions against six millions, more or less. Europeans think that we are twenty millions (minus the thinds and the traitors) against six million white enemies and four million black friends. Now more than half of our overrated strength has been citherto exhausted, not in overcoming our six million white enemies, but in repelling to their side our four million black friends.

Quos Deus vult, perdere!

FROM NASSAU.

Running the Blockade—Seizure of the Privateer Ovieto by the British—The Nashville Chased back into Port.

The brig Lucy Darling, Capt. Souper, from Nassau June 28, arrived on Tuesday morning. Capt. Souper reports:

Left steamer Herald, from England for Charleston, S. C., ready; Minha, do. for do. do.; Bahama, for do., waiting; Tuleatanen, for Charleston, do.; Minna, for England; Emilie, from and for Charleston, ready; Leopard, for do., waiting. Capt. Souper also reports that there were two steamers at Cockburn Anchorage, and two lying off Hog Island, names not known. On June 28, saw a large full ship-rigged English propeller (merchant) making for Nassau; also, a large bark, deep loaded, showing English colors, and bound to Nassau.

The ship Kearsarge, Capt. Savage, from Havana for New-York, with a cargo of sugar in hogsheads and boxes, fell on her beamends in the Gulf Stream, between Florida and Bahama Banks, when the wreckers from Nassau fell in with her and cut away the mainmast. But as the ship would not right, they towed her ashore at Biminis, where a portion of her cargo was saved in a damaged condition. The ship, when last heard from, was bilged. The mate and crew arrived in Nassau on the 23d inst. in the schooner Triumph.

The steamer Cecil, for Charleston with munitions of war, ran on a rock off north-east point of Abaco, and sank in four fathoms water. She became a total wreck. The wreckers had saved the greater part of her cargo in a damaged condition, and it was being sold at auction on the 26th and 27th June. Among the articles saved were six small brass cannon, smooth bore, and marked "Weir."

The steamers Nashville and Kate sailed on the 21st for New Inlet, N. C., and both were chased back, the Nashville getting into Gun Cay, Abaco, and the Kate into Eleuthera Turtle.

OUR SICK AND WOUNDED HEROES
