PAVING THE STREETS OF HAVANA, CUBA.—IMPORTANT NOTICE TO CAPITALISTS AND OWNERS OF QUARRIES.—The City Council of Havana advertises for proposals, which will be received in said city on the 5th of November next, for the furnishing of 50,000 square metres of TRAPP BLOCK, and 20,000 square metres of FLAGGING, as also the laying of the same in the streets of said city. The work must be commenced within sixty days after the signing of the contract, and be finished within the term of two years—the contractor to lay 2,100 metres of said block per month, and 2,100 metres of sidewalk. The price of the 50,000 metres of paving is set down at $4 05 per metre, payable by the City Council in municipal bonds, with seven per cent interest per annum, amortizable in ten years and paid when due to the holder. For this purpose these bonds will be delivered to the contractor as the acceptance of the works executed, which will be done monthly, the coupons thereof being received in payment of the municipal taxes, and the City Council will devote yearly in their budget, as obligatory expenses, the sum requisite for the payment of the interest and amortization of the capital. The payment of the 20,000 metres contain sidewalk is set down at $4 20 per square metre, and will be made to the contractors one-half in six months after the work is executed and accepted, and the other half at the end of the succeeding six months. If bids be offered for the performance of the above work at lower figures than those fixed by the corporation, the contractor will have the right to execute the amount of square metres of pavement and sidewalk necessary to cover the sum of $500,000, to which the two contracts combined will be extended in each case.

To be a bidder, parties must deposit in the City Council offices, in cash or in shares of the Spanish Bank of Havana, the sum of $25,000, which sum the contractor will lose if he should not fulfill strictly all the conditions of the contract.

Those wishing further information in detail on the subject can obtain it on application at the Consulate of Spain in this city, and by examining the Havana Gazeta of the 2d instant, at the office of The New-York Tribune.

IONA GRAPE VINES.

My Descriptive Catalogue (sixth edition), with wholesale and retail price lists, and much information concerning the planting and management of vines, will be sent for one cent stamp.

Illustrated Catalogue, which is a comprehensive manual of the Vine, and designed to furnish just such information as purchasers and planters in garden and vineyard require, will be sent for two three-cent stamps. Sixth edition, five additional engravings and new price lists, now ready.

My stock of Vines is this season larger than I have ever before been able to produce, and I offer them in quantity at prices which will but little more than pay the cost of production. In excellence of quality I may fearlessly say they are such as no other propagator can equal or approach, for no others have facilities that can be brought into comparison with mine for the production of Vines of the best character.

I have so many that I cannot dispose of them all at retail, for want of ability to make up so many packages; and to induce the general formation of clubs, I offer them to those who will join in their orders, at such wholesale rates as will, in saving the cost of agencies, bring the vines safely to the hands of purchasers at less than one-half price, and with further important advantages. Agents cannot deliver them with the directness and care that will secure their reception in the best condition, or their being true to name, even when most honestly disposed. But honesty has not been the general characteristic of those who have sold vines, and most extensive impositions have been practiced in their sale in every part of the country. Letters every season come from all quarters, saying, "Our people know little about vines, except from the statements of agents, and they have been so sadly deceived and cheated by them that they have not only lost confidence in agents, but often in producers of vines, and in grapes, also, for many falsely advertising growers have caused greater frauds than their little agents."

I propose, this season, to carry but a plan which was long since devised for the mutual benefit of myself and my customers, doing away with all agencies, except such local ones as those in whom the people of each district have confidence, and choose to place their trust.

I do not want any more for the Vines than they are sold for to agents, and any one who will carefully read the catalogues and acquire the necessary information, and invite his neighbor to join in the purchase of vines, will receive them at lowest wholesale prices, and will receive some acknowledgment for his services, in the shape of a vine of remarkable quality, which I have produced for the purpose.

All of the kinds, this season, are good, healthy, and vigorous—but the Delawares and Diannas surpass any that I have before produced. These being the two leading kinds, have for twelve years received my special attention, although none of the valuable kinds have failed to receive a proper measure of care to place them in the rank which their merit fits them to receive.

And it is with no small degree of satisfaction that I look back upon the result of the attention that I have given these. At that time (twelve years since) both of them came into my hands so embedded by ill usage that they were everywhere spoken against, and denounced as too feeble to be of any value. Seeing the cause, I applied the remedy, and they are now everywhere acknowledged, by those whose opinion is of weight, to be not only our best grapes, but the best in habit of growth and productiveness. Such cautious men as Mottier and Rogers, and Wenk, always have before their hearers an opinion, and I refer the doubting to them, and countless others who have had extensive experience from vines that I have furnished them through a series of years.

To have been the chosen instrument of so beneficent results renders it impossible to recall to mind with pain or anger the words and acts of opprobrium that were cast upon me by those cultivators who should have been foremost in encouragement of the undertaking. They are now following after, and claiming for their cheap imitations the merit which they have not the liberality or the care to produce.

My success in this was parent to the idea of making all vines of the healthful quality for garden or vineyard planting, and now it is demonstrable from more than one hundred thousand living witnesses that vines which are carried in perfect health through their first seasons of propagation may be made to produce the fourth year a better crop than such as are produced by the former roughest process the seventh year, with the further advantage that the one will under proper care remain in perpetual health while the other can never be brought into perfect health.

I at once expended more than $30,000 for the appliances for doing it, and the vines which I now offer are the result of full experience in the undertaking. I shall hereafter offer letters from every quarter, showing the results of tests to which they have been subjected.

My stock consists of one acre under glass and twelve acres in open air. None of them are brought to great size by forcing with liquid manure, or manure in any form, or by unnatural heat, but they are grown in just such soil as a good farmer would choose for a fine crop of corn, but twice as deep, or such as the vineyardist would choose to plant them in for best wine, and just such as is best calculated for development of hardiness of wood and foliage.

Out of much more than one hundred thousand Delaware vines that are now growing in gardens and vineyards to testify to the excellence of my packing, as well as to the quality of the vines, some are in every one of the United States and Territories, including Utah, Oregon, and California, the Canadas, West Indies, South America, Australia, and all of the vine-growing countries of Europe, all having received them in perfect order.

I will warrant every plant ordered from me to be received in perfect condition and true to name, and will send free of charge for transportation all packages of vines to any place east of the Mississippi when the amount is fifty dollars and upward. To clergymen only wholesale rates are ever charged, and to those who feel enough interest in the matter to speak to their people of my vines and of the enjoyment and profit to their families which they can easily obtain from them, some grateful recognition will be sent; and to every one who will read the descriptive catalogue so as to understand the value of good vines, and how to treat them, and endeavor to interest neighbors to the extent of a few dollars, I will send a vine of such excellence as cannot be procured elsewhere at any price. I have vines one and two years old much cheaper than noted in catalogue, for those who wish very cheap vines.

My Illustrated Catalogue is intended to meet the wants of all who desire to know what good vines are; what they will do under any given circumstances, and how to manage them in garden and vineyard, and is the most comprehensive treatise on the vine that has been published in this country.

It contains forty-eight very large closely printed pages, (equal to one hundred and fifty pages of such books as Buchanan and Bomin on the vine, which, though not the newest, are still the best that have been published) and forty engravings, which are drawn chiefly from living vines, for the purpose of showing clearly every stage of preparation from planting to full establishment in bearing of fifteen methods of training, and giving full details of six of the best plans for garden and vineyard in this country, and such as have been thoroughly tested and approved by the best cultivators.
