REBELDOM.

A series of papers written by Federal Prisoners (Privates) in Richmond, Tuscaloosa, New-Orleans, and Salisbury, N. C., with appendix.
1 vol. 16mo., Cloth. Price 50 cents.

Unlike anything which has before been written, full of the purest patriotism, this little book is an undying honor to its several authors, and the noble army of which they form so noble a part. It will take its place in history, a living evidence of the moral and intellectual worth of that "rank and file" who, going forth at their country's call, have never wavered, but, with unswerving bravery, have gone on performing deeds of valor and heroism of which we may well be proud. Suffering all things, enduring all things, and sacrificing all things, they have earned for themselves the everlasting gratitude of their country. Let all those who would know of what our armies are composed, read this little memorial of the Privates. T. O. H. P. BURNHAM, Publisher,

TWO CAPITAL NEW JUVENILES FOR BOYS.
I.
STORIES OF THE WOODS;
or,
ADVENTURES OF LEATHER-STOCKING:
Selected from the "Leather-Stocking Tales" by J. FENIMORE COOPER.
A Book for Boys. With Illustrations by Darley.
II.
STORIES OF THE SEA:
being
NARRATIVES OF ADVENTURE, selected from the "Sea Tales" By J. FENIMORE COOPER.
A Book for Boys. With Illustrations by Darley.

These splendid and graphic adventures on the sea which we find in the "Red Rover," the "Water Witch," the "Pilot," and others of Cooper's "Sea Tales," and those thrilling exploits of the famous Leather-Stocking, narrated in the "Deerslayer," the "Pioneers," the "Pathfinder," etc., have a charm and spirit which nothing in romantic literature excels. It was believed that, with a little judicious abbreviation, the leading incidents of those books could be so selected as to form a collection of Tales of Adventure, each complete in itself, and well calculated by their stirring and spirited nature to prove intensely interesting to juvenile readers. With this view the "STORIES OF THE SEA," and the "STORIES OF THE WOODS," were compiled, and in each instance the editor has been enabled to crowd into one small volume a large number of the most attractive incidents from several of Cooper's Works—securing always completeness, variety, and sufficient brevity. They can scarcely fail to be favorites with all boys fond of stories of adventure and exploit.

Issued in elegant uniform 16 mo. volumes, with gilt backs and sides. PRICE 75 CENTS EACH.

GRAPE VINES.
My list comprises all of the valuable varieties, and I offer them at prices that would not pay for the production of Vines of like excellence under ordinary circumstances.

I have made the production of Vines my business for many years, and by care and attention have learned their wants and the best method of supplying them, so as to develop the naturally strong and healthy constitution which our best kinds possess when in unimpaired vigor.

I have for my assistants more than thirty men who are trained to the business, and feel a delight in their careful, painstaking occupation, for the beautiful results which their skill and diligence accomplish. All of the different departments are under my own immediate supervision, and nothing is suffered to be omitted that my care or knowledge can supply, under the feeling that the matter deserves my best attention.

To those who wish to purchase Vines, for Garden or Vineyard, for any part of the country, I shall from time to time, through the columns of THE TRIBUNE, offer such hints and testimonials as will enable them to become well informed in all that pertains to the purchase of Vines.

All vines are warranted true to name and description, and to be received in perfect order.

Illustrated Catalogue (sixth edition) contains, beside price-list and full descriptions of all valuable varieties, directions for preparation of ground for garden or vineyard, and all that pertains to the management of the vine, and all vines sent by me, and treated as directed, will give satisfaction.

I am disposed to make the most favorable terms with all who wish to procure any number, from one single plant of the cheapest description to the plants for the largest vineyards.

Single vines, under the present postal arrangement, can be sent safely any distance at small cost, by letter. But it will be far better for seller and buyer to form clubs and receive the vines by express, this saving at least half the cost of the vines.

The vines ordered by each person will be labeled with his name, and reach him in as good condition as they entered my packing cellar. The roots of the vines are never exposed warm in my care more than a few moments to the air, and buyers who are equally careful of them and follow the plain, common-sense directions given in Illustrated Catalogue never lose a vine or fail to have them perform all that I promise for them, each according to their grade.

I cannot in an advertisement give very precise ideas of the relative value of the different kinds and classes, but those who look into the catalogue will find there all that they wish to know, clearly stated as the subject will permit. I have three grades of quality that are not stated. They are Nos. 4, 5 and 6. These are all below No. 3 of the catalogue, and designed to sell by special negotiation. They are all warranted healthy, and are small because they were started late in the season. Those that are started early, it will be understood, have the advantage of two seasons, or rather of a double season, without any of the disadvantages. A very common error is that of desiring to purchase vines several years old. I cannot here discuss that subject, but it is one of importance to buyers, and half an hour of study will enable them to be well informed on the subject. I can only state that the best possible vine of one year old is the best possible vine that can be produced, both for immediate bearing and for permanent productiveness.

The catalogue gives much information on the subject, and in Landmarks it is fully represented, so that no student can fail to comprehend it.

It is one part of the labor of the propagator of vines to produce good ones, and another to represent their qualities clearly to purchasers.

On the part of purchasers it should be understood also that their labors are complex, and do not consist in the simple purchase of plants.

They should know something of the characteristics of good ones, and how to treat them, and those they cannot fully understand without knowing something of how they are produced.

The Delaware is the most difficult of propagation, one good large vine of that costing more than two of the same size of Diana, and more than four or six even of Concord, Perkins, Hartford Prolific, or Northern Muscadine, or any of that class.

The following are the prices of a few grades of Delawares. It should be understood that the numbers have no relation to vines in general, but only to those of the person's stock who uses them. My numbers four and five have often been made the one and two of dealers who bought of me. In this way many thousands have been sold, purchasers thinking they were buying according to my numbers:

PRICE OF IONA VINES PER HUNDRED.

Delaware Vines grown from single eyes in open air—No. 1, $50; No. 2, $37; No. 3, $25. All of these grades are produced and carried through the season with such care as no other propagator has ever bestowed upon vines to maintain all their parts in perfect health through the first season, but with nothing more than is needed to make them perfect in their ability to endure and produce which planted in gardens or vineyard. Vines two years old at the same price. I have vines grown under glass in pots at the same prices for the same numbers of grades.

The cost being about equal, I have made the prices so. But the cost of vines as they are ordinarily grown in open air is not more than one third or one fourth as great. Of such I have 250,000, which I offer at from $20 to $30 per hundred, and I claim for them unusual excellence for their kind, for they have been grown with the best care and skill, and such regard for their health as few vines receive.

The first three classes are the cheapest vines, so far as money is concerned, and if waiting for the fruit is estimated, none but the best class will be bought.

Of the three numbers, No. 1 will also be found to be the cheapest.

A letter which I have just received will illustrate this fully. It may be taken as a sample of many from all parts of the country.

"WATERLOO, New-York, September 25.

DR. GRANT—Dear Sir: When I first bought vines, I had to buy a little experience too. I had no idea of looking east to the Hudson, then, for vines. The little things that I then bought show what vines that are badly propagated will not do, and yours that were bought later, show what good vines will do. I have adopted your ideas of cultivation in every thing except distance, and may come to that soon. I have just sold my grapes, Isabellas—the finest that I ever saw—for twenty cents a pound, and Delawares for thirty cents; each vine that I had of you bearing enough to pay its fellows, and the others—I won't mention them. You state less than the truth when you say the difference in the first crop will pay the difference between the cost of best and poorest vines. Like all others that I know of that have made the trial, I shall hereafter buy only of you. I have a Club of 20 for Landmarks.

"I remain truly yours, F. C. BREHM.

"P. S.—Although my Isabellas brought a good price, I am glad I have no more of them, for no one who has eaten one pound of Delawares will ever buy another of Isabellas. His feelings are set to new music, and tuned up to concert pitch. Since I have seen how good vines are produced, I do not grudge the cost. F. C. B."

All letters of inquiry will be promptly answered, and information given. C. W. GRANT, Iona, N. Y.
