Total Democratic vote for Congress	192,615
Total Union vote for Congress	186,167
Total Democratic majority	1,855

The delegation stands 9 Unionists and 14 Democrats.

The average Democratic majority on the State ticket is 5,594, while the Congressional vote foots up a majority of only 1,855.

There are several reasons for this defeat of the Unionists, but the principal ones are the want of an efficient organization among themselves and the fact that they have furnished fully three-fourths of the volunteers from this State. In those counties where an active and efficient campaign was carried on by both parties, we have an increased Union vote. But these counties were not many, and do not exceed a half a dozen in number. The vote of Warren, Lucas, Wood, Clarke is sufficient evidence of what might have been done had the Unionists did what their opponents were not backward in doing—work. Had the soldiers been allowed to vote, there is no doubt but that there would have been a Union majority much greater than that of last year; and in saying this I make no random guess. In several of the Ohio regiments elections have been held for the purpose of obtaining an expression of sentiment, and in not a single instance have the Democrats received over fifty votes in a regiment, and in those raised in strong Democratic counties the number has been smaller than otherwise. I have before me the statistics of three companies of the 28th and two of the 15th Regiment present when the vote was taken, and the result is: Union, 281; Democrats, 8; not voting, 9. Thus, while the Republicans and Union Democrats are fighting for the maintenance of the Union, the Democrats stay at home to avoil themselves of the spoils of a transient political victory. "Party before country" is the motto they follow.

The Congressional vote in the State gives a Democratic majority of 1,855.

Missouri Election.

ST. LOUIS, Friday, Nov. 7, 1862.

Blow's majority in the 1st Congressional District, leaving out the soldiers' vote, is 457. Returns from the army will probably increase it to 1,000.

Information from the Vth District represents the vote between Gen. Thomas L. Price and McClung as close, with the chances in favor of the latter.

Gen. Loan, Union Emancipationist, is undoubtedly elected in the VIIth District.

Wm. A. Hall is elected in the VIIIth District by some 400 majority.

J. S. Rollins is elected from the IXth District by a small majority.

Returns from the State are yet meager, but it is safe to assume that a majority of the members of the Legislature elect are for Emancipation.

FROM DAKOTAH.

Correspondence of The N. Y. Tribune.

YANKTON, D. T., Oct. 15, 1862.

The correspondence from this Territory, which I promised you in my first letter, has been interrupted by my unavoidable absence for two months, and since my return by the Indian panic which has prevailed here since early in September.

The Indian raid in Minnesota had the effect to alarm the inhabitants of Northern Nebraska, North-Western Iowa, and Dakota, until a panic prevailed which bid fair to produce the most disastrous results; if a friendly Indian was seen, he was at once magnified into an army of Santees, and the cry of the goose or the crane was supposed to be the distant war-whoop of the relentless savage; the settlers left their claims, and with their wives and children sought refuge in the towns, fortifications were erected at all the principal points, but no hostile Indians appearing, the people have generally returned to their homes, and the steps now being taken by the military authorities have quieted the nervous apprehension existing in the public mind.

An examination of the map of the Territories organized by Congress in February and March, 1861, will show that Dacotah lies north of a line extended from Chicago nearly due west to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, this point the capital, being, as stated in my previous letter, located on the Missouri, which is here the south line of the Territory, the river running for about 100 miles from the mouth of the Niobrara, or "Running Water," to Sioux City, nearly east. The Niobrara rises near Fort Laramie, and runs nearly due east to its junction with the Missouri, through a fertile country, said to be very well timbered along the river and its numerous tributaries, so that a line for the northern branch of the Pacific Railroad can be secured nearly to the South Pass, being almost an air-line west from Chicago, with timber amply sufficient for all practical purposes, and from 150 to 180 miles nearer than the Platte River route, which is nearly bare of timber for hundreds of miles.

The most of the travel between this place and the Eastern States has hitherto passed over the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad and other roads terminating in Iowa, and by steamer on the Missouri or by stage, but the most direct and cheapest route for emigrants hither to take is via Dubuque, Cedar Falls, Fort Dodge, and Sioux City, the present terminus of the Dubuque and Sioux City road being at Cedar Falls, and lines of stages extending from that place to Fort Randall in this Territory, 80 miles above this town.

The Missouri is, however, the natural outlet for the surplus products of this fertile country seeking an Eastern market. Four large steamboats have visited Fort Benton this season, loaded with men and supplies for the gold mines of Washington Teritory and for the different military posts belonging to the National Government, and have returned to St. Louis.

The fur trade of Dakota is very heavy, the different tribes of Indians west and north of the ceded lands, numbering over 60,000 souls, being mostly engaged in Buffalo hunting and trapping the different animals whose skins are valuable.

The American Fur Company do the largest business with the Indians, but many individuals, tempted by the large profits realized when successful, visit the head waters of the Missouri, where a good buffalo skin can be bought for a brass ring, and an otter skin for a tin-cup full of sugar or coffee, and when their goods are disposed of descend the Missouri with the proceeds in open Mackinaw boats, one of which called at this place having on board skins and peltries worth in St. Louis $25,000, all purchased with a few traps taken overland from St. Paul to Fort Benton.

These Indian traders are a rough, bold class of men, inured to danger and accustomed to dangerous adventures. They all seem enamored with their wandering, rollicksome life, are honorable in their business transactions, frequently become rich, and usually end their days with the singular people with whom they become connected by ties which ultimately they have no desire to sever. The Yankton and Ponka Indians, of whom the ceded lands were purchased by the General Government, reside upon their reservations, lying upon the Missouri, some 65 miles above this place. They number together about 3,000 souls, and are under the agencies of Dr. Wm. A. Burleigh, formerly of Pennsylvania, and Maj. Hoffman of New-York. Under their energetic management, these Indians are improving in their knowledge of agriculture; and although they have not given up entirely their wandering habits, they have raised the past season over 1,000 acres of corn, with other crops.

The head chief of the Yanktons has abandoned war and the chase, and become a practical farmer. "Old Strike," as he is called, was formerly a great warrior, is a man of decided ability, friendly to the whites, and says he has become a white man. No danger is apprehended from these tribes; they are universally loyal to the Government, and in case of difficulty with the upper Indians, they would undoubtedly join the settlers and the military force at Fort Randall in repelling their attacks.

How the Soldiers Vote.

To the Editor of The N. Y. Tribune.

SIR: To show you that Wadsworth is appreciated in the army, I herein send you the vote of the 3d N. Y. Vol. Infantry, a reputed Democratic regiment. The vote was mostly taken by ballot, and most of the companies are from the Democratic wards of Albany and New-York city.

The Owego Company (H) had only 4 votes for Seymour, therefore the banner Company of the Regiment in favor of Wadsworth. With such a test in regard to Democratic votes for Wadsworth we are not afraid of the result in our native State.

The figures stand thus: For Wadsworth, 373; for Seymour, 258; whole number, 631; Wadsworth's majority, 115.

As far as I can ascertain, the officers, field and line, have a majority for Seymour.

Yours, &c., A MEMBER OF THE 3d N. Y. V.

Notes on Chronic Diseases.

BY DR. A. WOLF, NO. 832 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

No. 4—EPILEPSY.

As I promised in my last, my present communication will be devoted to a description of a malady but too often witnessed in this country, and known as Epilepsy, or Falling Sickness.

This is a peculiar form of Convulsive Disease, returning at uncertain and irregular intervals. There is loss of sense and voluntary motion, and the attacks come on suddenly and unexpectedly, sometimes without any premonitory symptoms, although, on the other hand, they are often preceded by some nervous twitching or other peculiar sensation. During the duration of the paroxysm, in which the convulsions of the general system are often fearful to behold, there is foaming at the mouth, and subsequently the patient often falls into a profound sleep. Epileptic fits usually affect those of adult age, and rarely attack those of tender years. Any constitutional irritation, or great temporary excitement, may induce Epilepsy. Disease of the brain and its coverings also gives rise to it, and when once instituted, the fits may be expected to recur with more or less frequency.

Many and serious are the mistakes which are daily committed by physicians in general practice in confounding Epilepsy with Hysteria or Apoplexy. Such never can occur when treated by one who embraces it in his specialty for chronic diseases, which I have been long and arduously devoted to. My method of cure is simple, and scientifically based on the soundest principles of modern medicine, and the results satisfactorily prove it to be the most speedy and certain at present known to our profession.

Notes on Dyspepsia will be given in my next.
