circumstances, but we feel justly indignant when a well-salaried officer, educated to his position at the public expense, having at his command unlimited means to solve all doubts by extended and complete experiments, acknowledges in an official document his total want of knowledge on every point which one in his position ought to know thoroughly. We feel more indignant still when we know that, while conscious of his own incapacity, he persistently refuses to examine the labors of intelligent minds directed to the elucidation of the very points respecting which he emphatically declares that he knows nothing. Routine abhors Progress, and Routine in the Ordnance office is the rule to which, unfortunately for our country, there is no single exception. Admiral Dahlgren has invented guns, of whose capacities he is entirely unconscious, and has taken out patents for the same in his own name, contrary to all official rule, and with these guns, of unknown qualities, he guards the Ordnance Department from all innovating, patent-damaging improvements. Over his official door should be placed, in letters of brass: "All who enter here leave Progress behind!"

It gives Admiral Dahlgren "pleasure to bear testimony to the promptness with which the private founderies have met the demands on them from the Government." This is a generous acknowledgment of merit, but we receive it with much suspicion. The demands are met undoubtedly; but how? What is the per centage of failures? What is the cost to the Government for the countless experiments to arrive at these failures? The experience of Capt. Rodman, Chief of the Army Ordnance Bureau, is totally adverse to the spirit of the above compliment to "private founderies." He says, after frankly enumerating a fearful list of failures, that "These facts, to my mind, are conclusive as to the fact that we are at present far from possessing a practical knowledge of the properties of cast-iron in its application to gun-foundering, and it is too much to expect of private enterprise to take up and prosecute so difficult and expensive an inquiry."

He further suggests that a series of experiments should be entered upon, at the expense of the Government, as early as practicable! For what are the millions of public money expended upon our Ordnance Departments, if not for the purpose of arriving by experiment at the very knowledge which our chiefs confess they do not possess? The Secretary of the Navy did not sustain Dahlgren's compliment to "private enterprise," when he applied to Congress for $30,000,000 to establish vast Government founderies to perform what Dahlgren asserts is so well performed by seven private firms. We are loth to attribute motives to others which are only remotely discernable, but we are forced to inquire, if there can be any mental connection between the "compliment" and the concluding paragraphs of Dahlgren's report, which are as follows:

"In conclusion, I beg to ask your consideration of the present organization of this Bureau. The nature of its duties are military as well as civil, and the minutest details of a cannon or its management on shipboard are subjects of its cognizance, as well as the directions for making cannon and all their complicated appliances.

"It is thus necessarily in the closest professional contact with commanders of fleets and of ships, as well as of founders and mechanics."

If further powers were confirmed to this Bureau, the "seven private firms" could hardly fail to find a friend in the officer who so handsomely complimented them.

JOHN VAN BUREN.

The irresistible humor of John Van Buren, which made his name a household word in 1848, seems to be returning to him with returning devotion to liberty and country. His speech at the great loyal meeting in the Cooper Institute on Friday evening was almost as remarkable for its characteristic drolleries of expression as for its noble declarations of support of the Government in the war to the bitter end. It was full of such quiet things as this:

I very often meet men who tell me that the people want this or that. Well, I say, I guess not. I am one of the people. I don't want it—and now do you get at the result? The only way I know of to determine what the people want, is to make up your mind what you want yourself, and then, infer, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that other people want it. [Prolonged laughter.]

And this:

The Emperor of the French will do exactly as he thinks is entirely for his own interest.

The following statement of Democratic ups and downs is in his best style:

The Democratic party, as you all know, nine years out of ten, controls the Government of the country. It requires, therefore, no great patriotism on their part to be attached to the Government and the country. It is, in fact, an attachment to themselves. [Laughter.] As a general rule, they are wise, prudent, and patriotic. Occasionally blind guides or bad drivers take some sleepy passengers into bad roads and upset them, as they did in 1848. [Laughter.] But then they wake up; the passengers get out [laughter]; they inquire the right road; they get a lantern and eventually they come all right. [Laughter.] I think they will do so now, and yet it seemed to me, as a careful man, looking at their course, just at this moment, that it was prudent for me to get out and walk. [Great laughter and three cheers.]

In his palmiest days and moods we think he never hit upon anything happier than this portraiture of Brooks:

I have been cautioned by a great many people about attending this meeting to-night. I was told that it was an insidious attempt to disintegrate the Democratic party, and a newspaper which joined us last Fall [laughter], and my representative in Congress, who never joines us at all, I have great fear that I will do something to disintegrate the Democratic party. My representative I have a very high opinion of. He seems to be very willing to represent the whole of our State and a considerable part of New-Jersey [laughter], and looking at his paper this evening, I perceive that he has taken charge of the Governments of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and several other States. It is not often that a man is favored with being provided with such extensive plans of usefulness. I read a speech that he made before the Democratic Union Association on the 4th of March as it was reported in The World on the 4th. Without undertaking to say what was proper for him to say or for him to omit, I will say that I thank God that he was not my representative until noon the next day. [Great and long continued laughter and applause.]

But Prince John must take heed what he says, or he will not escape the condemnation of his Democratic friends. His closing words were:

With our immense population and resources we ought to end this war in ninety days. Start your troops in New-Orleans, at Vicksburg, at Fredericksburg, at Charleston, and in Tennessee. Charge along the whole line—advance with energy and with union, and my word for it in ninety days everybody will wonder that the rebellion was ever regarded as formidable in any portion of the United States. [Prolonged cheers.]

We think we remember that for the utterance of just such opinions as these, men have been called "Onward to Richmond fanatics."

The Herald having asserted the falsehood that "Senator Sumner and his fellow-conspirators, including Greeley, regard the Union with Slavery in it as 'a covenant with death and an agreement with hell'" The Richmond Enquirer heartily responds to the sentiment, and The N. Y. Express gleefully copies the compound calumny. Neither Sumner nor Greeley ever regarded the Federal Constitution as "a covenant with death," as their Confederate calumniators well know. They concur with Mr. Madison in his avowal that this Constitution should not and does not affirm the right of property in man by man. It simply declines to interfere with the internal regulations of States for the guidance of their own inhabitants.

THE N. Y. TRIBUNE strenuously urges everybody who has gold to sell it, and to invest the proceeds in Government securities. Mr. Greeley is said to have made a great deal of money in his wool and ivory speculations. Has he any objection to tell the public how his large reputed gains are invested; or what proportion of the investment consists of United States bonds? [Boston Courier.

As to our "reputed gains," we must refer the curious inquirer to the inventors of the gun contract and other impudent fabrications; but all our actual gains for some years back are invested in "United States bonds," and would be, were they a hundred times as great. Nay: the money sent us in advance by our subscribers about the first of the present year, and which we shall have to repay them in newspapers during the course of the year, is invested, to the amount of many thousands of dollars, in U. S. Certificates of Indebtedness, which we calculate will fall due about as fast as our Paper-Maker calls for the cash in payment of his monthly bills. Are you answered?

Mr. FREDERICK MONTGOMERY, late Editor of The Vicksburg Whig, a Southron born, who has been speaking for the Union in the North-West, goes up to Connecticut to-morrow morning to help the friends of the good cause in their pending contest. He is confident that the Blockade and the Proclamation, thoroughly enforced, will soon break down the Rebellion. Though never till recently a public speaker, he has the root of the matter in him, and makes an effective address. He will probably stop at Norwalk to-day.

They have a "Democratic" House of Representatives now sitting at Harrisburg, Pa., which was asked to lend its hall for one evening to citizens desiring to hear patriotic addresses from Ex-Gov. Joseph A. Wright of Indiana and Ex-Gov. Andrew Johnson of Tennessee. But these lifelong Democrats are not Copperheads, so the door was shut in their faces. Ah well! some men are making a record that will not easily be effaced.

We chronicle with pleasure the election of GEORGE BROWN, Editor of The Globe (Toronto), to the Canadian Parliament from South Oxford. His majority over the Ministerial candidate is 275. Mr. Brown edits the most widely circulated and influential newspaper in British America, and has ever been a judicious and earnest opponent of Human Slavery. We need not add that he is an opponent of the Slaveholders' Rebellion.

Jane R. Thurston offers, through a Portland (Maine) journal, "to furnish for the sum of $500 (which sum shall be given for the relief of the sick and wounded soldiers) a plan which will close up the Rebellion and unite all the States in six months, or refund the money." Jane ought not to let a beggarly $500 stand between her and the salvation of her country.

The N. Y. Express says:

"The authority to pay this [Third] Mileage, be it remembered, was passed in a Republican Congress—in the House 67 to 60, in the Senate 26 to 17."

Is The Express honest enough to let its readers see just how many Republicans and how many "Conservatives" voted respectively for and against this Third Mileage? The truth wrongs no man; let your readers see it!

"The Detroit Free Press, a Republican paper, we think," says The Express. The Free Press aforesaid is exactly such a "Republican paper" as The Chicago Times, Richmond Enquirer, and Charleston Mercury. Of course, it tries to excuse the mob which has been burning the houses and taking the lives of innocent Blacks in Detroit. It does not pretend, however, that they did any wrong, but lays the blame on the Provost Guard.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

M. Maretzek's Opera Company.

The Academy was graced, last night, with an overflowing and brilliant audience, to hear the opera of Il Ballo in Maschera, performed by the newly-arrived company, under the direction of M. Maretzek. We had occasion to remark on their previous and initial appearance, that allowances must be made for the vocal artists, just from ship-board, and in a new climate and before a strange audience. Last night it was evident that the company proceeded individually and collectively better than on the first evening. To those already heard was added Mlle. Brignoli (no relation to the American tenor of the same name); a light soprano who performed the part of the Page to the satisfaction of the audience, and secured the laurel of an encore in an aria. There is one more artist yet to be heard: the bass, who will appear on Wednesday.—The chief soprano Madame Medori last night was steadier in her execution and intonated more correctly than on the first evening of her performance here. Her very large volume of tone is adequate to the size of the Academy. "London," says the old saw, "is the death of small reputations." The Academy of Music is the death of small voices. For effect, every thing must be doubled over an ordinarily-sized opera-house. An orchestra of fifty should be enlarged to a hundred: a chorus ought to be two hundred to bring the necessary volume from out the circle of the canvas into the immense, far-reaching capacities of the auditorium. The tenor, Signor Mazzoleni, produced a very great impression on the hearers by his manly notes: a vivid encore followed his aria—a most distinct compliment—and the best an artist can ask. The heavy part of Ulrica was assigned to the contralto, Mlle Sulzer. It has no dramatic merit—less even if possible than the average of situations of the opera—whose scene is Boston, Mass.—time, that of Franklin's grandfather—manners, those of Louis the Fourteenth's Court—a preternatural jumble lovely to contemplate.

In the ball scene, Mlle. Galetti and Signor Ronzani appeared as dancers, and kept up, so far as two dancers could, something like the spirit of a ball scene.

The performance last night was a success, and promises well for future essays by the same artists.

CARLOTTA PATTI'S BENEFIT.—This evening Carlotta Patti gives her farewell in America at Irving Hall, on which occasion the following eminent artists have kindly consented to assist her: Mr. Wm. Castle, J. R. Thomas, J. N. Patterson, Theodore Thomas, and Mr. Gottschalk. Miss Patti sails for Europe to-morrow on the steamer Africa.

The market fees received by the Collector of Revenue for last week amounted to $3,599 33.

A Mystery!

To the Editor of The N. Y. Tribune.

SIR: Mr. Wm. Allen Butler, in his defense of his partner, Mr. Collector Barney, asserts that he (Barney) has never received one cent for any services or commissions connected with the business of Cotton Agent.

Now, one "H. Barney, Cotton Agent," renders an account to the Secretary of the Treasury, which the latter communicates to the Senate of the United States on the 17th of February, vide "Ex. Doc., No. 42." It is not very clear or explicit as a commercial document, but it admits the receipt of $6,762 91-100 for commissions, and $7,088 21-100 as charges, making an aggregate of $13,851 12-100.

There are evidently two Barneys. One is Hiram Barney, Collector of the Port of New-York, and the other is H. Barney, Cotton Agent. Mr. Butler's exculpatory card applies to the former. It would be difficult to show that the list of ch[illegible] made up by the Mr. Barney who is Cotton Agent [illegible]re reasonable, or in conformity to usage, and absolutely impossible to convince the community that he did not receive a share of them.

Nor can we suppose that Mr. Chase would refine upon cruelty by superadding to the arduous labors of the Collector the heavy burden of the Cotton Agency. He must have designed to separate those distinct and incongruous offices.

There can be only one question in the case. Who is this mysterious "H. Barney, Cotton Agent?" It is due to the Collector that he should be found, and made to bear the opprobrium which justly enough attaches to the style in which this business of selling Government cotton has been transacted. Show him up.

BULL'S HEAD—Monday, March 9.—We have a somewhat remarkable state of things at the opening of the beef-cattle market in Forty-fourth street this morning. The weather is bright and clear, and so warm that the little snow that fell since Saturday is all afloat. Yet the cattle-trains are all reported blockaded with snow. At any rate we had no stock from Albany till nearly noon. At the opening there was not over 1,500 on sale. There came in on Saturday by the New-Jersey Central and Erie, and one train on the Hudson on Sunday. If there had been no more expected the market would have opened lively; but as it was known that a large supply was likely to arrive at any moment, the market opened dull at about the same rates as last week—that is, 8¾@9c. ℔ lb net for the most, seller sinking offal. About noon, 700 head came in, and during the afternoon more arrived, and trade continued slow, many of the buyers preferring to wait till all the stock arrives that is expected tonight. We notice that some of the brokers are anxious to sell out to-day, and accept buyers' offers more freely than last week. Others hold their stock as stiff as though it was certain that the whole is in, and that with such a short supply they can easily get an advance. We shall see to-morrow, when there will doubtless be more cattle than to-day. Messrs. Sears & Read are in market for a couple of hundred army beeves, and willing to pay 9¾@c. ℔ lb net for good shipping cattle, but will not buy any but good ones, and are unwilling to pay 10c. which they are asked to-day. The hog market is lightly supplied, and prices advanced to 6½c. ℔ lb, live weight, for the best. The sheep market is wild; $2@$5 25 each, for anything offered; pelts, $2@$5 25 each.

DRY-GOODS CLERKS EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT.—We call attention to the special notice in another column of THE TRIBUNE this morning, announcing a public meeting to be held at Cooper Institute on Friday evening next, the 13th inst.
