THE STATE OF EUROPE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, August 30, 1864.

Instead of great, stirring news, we have to chronicle plenty of little ones. First, we had a bloody riot at Geneva at the occasion of the elections. The notorious Fazy,—the Fernando Wood of the Lake City, who during his administration had ruined the finances of the Republic, while he himself grew rich, being impudent enough to keep a gambling-house,—was defeated; his party, the so-called Radical, supported by the rabble and by the Roman Catholic priests, proclaimed the nullity of the election and fired upon the unarmed crowd which followed the Government officials, who announced the result of the election to the people. There were about eight dead and a proportionate number of wounded; the federal authorities interfered, however, in time; peace is restored and an inquest ordered, which, however, will prove as resultless as the trial of the rioters at New-York. Next to that row, it was the visit of the King of Prussia to the Emperor of Austria which occupied the pens of the newswriters. King William came to Vienna for concerting the policy of the two great German powers as regards the affairs of Germany. We do not know the details of the arrangement, but we see the secondary powers of the Father-land as meekly submit to their destiny, as the Indian Rajahs to the Governor-General. Bavaria has changed the Cabinet, since Von der Pfurten seemed too independent, thus Bismarck and Rechberg will find no more opposition at Munich. Saxony, too, has caved in; the King does not support his talented Minister, Mr. Beust, and avoids putting himself in opposition with Prussia and Austria. The new King of Wurtemberg is hen-pecked, and Queen Olga, the sister of the Czar, seconds the policy of the new Holy Alliance; thus the Grand Duke of Baden has remained isolated, and does not dare to lead the fry of small princes, who in Spring had nearly become popular by putting themselves at the head of the national German agitation, but are now most anxious to come to terms with that terrible Bismarck, who threatens to swallow them up, one by one. As to Denmark, the peace has not yet been concluded, as it is in the interest of Prussia to delay the treaty as long as possible, in order to give time for eluding the claims of the Prince of Augustenburg, and for preparing the way for their annexation. Here in Italy the opinion is prevalent that we shall have war in the Spring; accordingly, the communications between the Cabinets of Paris and Turin are frequent and important. Gen. Menabrea returned for the second time to Paris; Gen. La Marmora went likewise thither. Now Prince Humbert is the guest of Prince Napoleon, his brother-in-law, and the Ministers at Turin seem to be satisfied with the result of their diplomacy. Still, the news about the marriage of Princess Ann Murat and the Prince Royal, after having been announced by all the papers of Europe, is now put in question. The Italians did not seem to like such a matrimonial alliance, and we suddenly hear that old Murat with his family is making a trip to Jerusalem. Still, whether a new match is to cement the Italo-French alliance or not, so much is certain, that the ministry must in a change for the better in the Emperor's Roman policy. The abduction of the Hebrew lad Cohen, at Rome—a repetition of the Mortara case—highly incensed Napoleon against the Papal Government. He wants, of course, the support of the French priests, still he cannot afford to put himself on bad terms with the Crœsuses at the Paris money market, who are all of Jewish persuasion. The Rothschilds, Pereires, Foulds, &c., are a great power in France, and they complained that their co-religionists are outraged at Rome, under the eyes of the French authorities. The French Ambassador, Sartiges, tried to persuade the Pope not to carry matters too far, and to restore the young Cohen to his parents, but the Pope replied again: Non possumus. There seems to have been an attempt on the part of the Mazzinians to kindle an insurrection in Venetia, especially in the Trentine country, but the Austrian authorities got wind of the intended expedition and imprisoned about one hundred of suspected patriots. In Italy, as in Galicia and Hungary, Austria rules exclusively by the sword; the prisons get never empty of political prisoners, and trials for high treason are a daily occurrence. Turkey remains quiet; the Sultan has forbidden the slave trade among the Circassians. The Prince of Roumania has published a decree emancipating the serfs and abolishing feudalism. The Greeks are quarreling among themselves, and their King proves just as insignificant a German prince as King Otho was, whom they tried to expel last year. Indeed, the Kings may boast of the grace of God, for nothing short of a miracle maintains such a set of imbeciles on the thrones of Europe.

The Musical Festival.

The day was most eligible for the "Fête" of the Musical Protective Union. A rude provision, in the form of some flooring-boards, was made for the auditors, who were numerous and thoroughly well pleased. All the music was instrumental, and on a scale suited to the open air and the occasion. The overture to Rienzi was the commencement of the work, by some two hundred musicians, effective players,—led by Mr. Bergman. Selections from La Traviata, conducted by Mr. Theo. Thomas. Then an address by Mr. Cozzens, which we were not in a position to hear, except some stray words. It was considered an effective effort and was well received. Then followed the Chasse of Mohul—conducted by Mr. Baker. After that selections from Lucia, led by Mr. Noll; and a march by Meyerbeer, conducted by Mr. Maretzek, concluded the performance. There was dancing before and after the Concert.

The festival, as we have already mentioned, is designed to bring as a beginning a vast mass of musicians into closer practical alliance for the purpose of forming a fund to build a hall and establish a conservatorio for the education of Americans in ordinary and transcendent music—digital, vocal and scientific. Such a result is needed. We have heard often theories about the tendencies of Democracy to do spontaneously for high art what is secured for it by the monarchical or despotic governments of Europe. Up to this time we have not found the theory promising. Art of all kinds in this country is disheveled and contradictory. The largest sums are made by quacks. There is no Academy of Music, except theaters bearing that name, meaning nothing under heavens, except they are let out indiscriminately to this, that, and the other reputable and disreputable object. There is no standard of criticism beyond the ipse dixit of individuals which may be good or may be bad. No authority is recognized. Operas are played, but, as a rule, subject to pure speculation, one manager one week and another another week. So there is no standard for the style of performances; for the numbers and freshness of the chorus, for the excellence and fullness of the orchestra.

For concerts—for anything original—the account is still poorer. New-York, in a word, calling itself a metropolis in art, is only a provincial town. After hearing and knowing the style in which great works are systematically executed in London with two and a half millions of inhabitants, to witness an operatic performance in this city with one million, as regards details of complete scenery, costumes, properties, orchestra, chorus, ballet, etc., is a fearful descent. Up to the time that managers are supported by certainties, not spasms—by knowledge, not pretense—by liberality, not parsimony—we perhaps can only look for things as they are. Open-mouthed provincial gawkeys waiting for what is done in Europe—in any foreign town or village—but never originated here, the public stand. If this movement of the "800 musicians" be real and heartfelt, there may be a change—but as yet we can see no logical premises. As regards the sister Art of Painting, matters are perhaps not quite so contemptible. Fugitive paintings are produced: those of the landscape not excelled. But we have no Academy of Arts. A million of inhabitants, and not a man with the liberality to support a standard collection of paintings after the European theory.

Metropolis? Fudge!

From New-Orleans.

CAIRO, Monday, Sept. 19, 1864.

The steamer Atlantic, with New-Orleans dates to the 14th inst., has arrived.

Cotton was in good request at full prices. The market had nearly recovered from its recent decline. Good ordinary, $1 75@$1 80; low middling, $1 82@$1 85; middling, $1 87½@$1 90.

There was some inquiry for Sugar; 200 boxes Havana, No. 12, sold at 21c.

Old superfine Flour, $13; new choice superfine, $13 25; extra, $15; low extra, $13 50. Stock on hand light, and assortment poor.

The steamer Emily B. Scudder was to leave New-Orleans for New-York on the 15th.

BOAT RACE.—The race between Robert Peach of New-York, and Walker of Brooklyn, rowed on Monday from the Battery around Robbins Reef light and back, was won by the former, having some minutes to spare.

From the Pacific Coast.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, Sept. 19, 1864.

The steamer Sierra Nevada has arrived from British Columbia with over $300,000 in gold, mostly from Portland.

Major-Gen. McDowell has returned from the tour of inspection among the defenses on the Northern coast.

The overland mail service is forthwith to be resumed from this side. The reports of the Indian troubles on the plains were greatly exaggerated.

CARPENTER'S PICTURE.—The "Emancipation Proclamation before the Cabinet," which was painted in and exhibited at the White House, will be opened to the public on Thursday next, at the Crayon Art Gallery corner of Ninth-st. and Broadway.
