NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ELIANA: BEING THE HITHERTO UNCOLLECTED WRITINGS OF CHARLES LAMB. 12mo. pp. 437. Hurd & Houghton.

With the editor of this volume, the mousing after the waifs and strays of Charles Lamb has been a genuine labor of love. Every scrap of correspondence, every fugitive hint for an essay, every sentence and every line of the quaint and genial effusions of his odd humor, has been sought out by his pious assiduity and gathered up with tender care. He will not yield to oblivion the least "notelet" or "essaykin" of his favorite. He would rather read the poorest of these fragments of the "gentle Elia" than the best productions of some of the most popular of modern authors. He believes that the old proverb which forms the motto on his title-page was made expressly to describe the writings of Lamb, "The king's chaff is as good as other people's corn;" and his checks are suffused with virtuous indignation because such rich and strange productions of such an excellent genius have been "underkept and down supprest" so long. With his fine bibliographical enthusiasm and knowledge, and his idolatrous admiration of Lamb, it is no wonder that he has met with eminent success in his pleasant enterprise. Not only nearly all of Lamb's uncollected writings that are spoken of in his "Life and Letters" have been unearthed, but a number of articles from his pen which neither he nor his biographer has even alluded to. A large proportion of readers will find the contents of the volume as good as manuscript, and not wholly unworthy of the unique author of the dissertation on "Roast Pig." If inferior, in some respects, to the most characteristic productions of the immortal Elia, they yet exhibit specimens of the most beautiful qualities of his genius, and are "flowered with the blossoms of learning and observation."

MEMOIRS OF THE REV. BENJAMIN C. CUTLER, D. D. By Rev. HORATIO GRAY, A. M. 12mo. pp. 439. Anson D. F. Randolph.

The career of a devoted and successful Episcopal clergyman is happily described in the present volume. Dr. Cutler was distinguished by his fidelity and zeal in the cause of the church of which he was a minister, by his unwearied devotion to the arduous duties of his profession, and by the austere virtues of his personal character, rather than by any shining gifts of intellect, or faculty of popular eloquence. The record of his life here given is full of interest and instruction. It shows careful labor in its preparation, the merits of its subject are set forth with warm appreciation, but without fulsome eulogy, and though candid and earnest in the expression of religious partialities, is far from theological bitterness.

POEMS. By CAROLINE MAY. 12mo. pp. 250. Carleton.

Most, if not all, of the poems in this volume have already seen the light, but are now published for the first time in a collective form. Without aiming at the higher flights of poetry, they exhibit a vein of refined, and often pensive, thought, a susceptible, if not a remarkably active, imagination, and an appreciative familiarity with the manifold aspects of nature. They contain nothing which can minister to the love of strong excitement, but many readers will be attracted by their quiet, melodious flow, their truthfulness of delineation, and their frequent passages of modest beauty.
