CAIRO, April 9, 1865.

The steamer Belle St. Louis furnishes Memphis dates of the evening of the 8th. The Bulletin says there are well authenticated reports in circulation in the city that Selma, Ala., was captured and burned several days ago by a force of our cavalry from Gen. Thomas's command. One report emanates from a merchant on Front Row. He was some distance out in the country a day or two since, and met and held conversation with a Rebel soldier. The soldier remarked in course of conversation: "I suppose you damned Memphis Yankees haven't heard yet that Selma was captured and burned the other day." The merchant replied that he had not. "Well, it's so," said the soldier, and the interview ended.

Confirmatory of this is the report received from Senatobia, Mississippi, that Mr. Hunt, Superintendent of Confederate foundaries at Selma, had reached the former place, having narrowly escaped capture by raiders, who, he stated, had sacked and burned Selma. He left his family at Selma, being unable to bring them away. A gentleman named Williams, from the country states that a large cavalry force of Unionists passed south through Elyton a few days ago. Elyton is 50 or 100 miles north of Selma.

RICHMOND.

Special Dispatch to The N. Y. Tribune.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, April 12, 1865.

The following are clipped from The Richmond Whig of April 10 and 11:

GRAND REVIEW.

Saturday afternoon was rendered remarkable in Richmond by the first review and parade of the United States forces occupying the city. The review ended, the line wheeled in marching order, and moved in the following order: Brig.-Gen. Charles Devins and staff, mounted band, squadron of cavalry, company of sappers and miners, company of sharpshooters, 115th New-York Infantry, 96th New-York, 9th Vermont, 5th Maryland, 5th Connecticut, 10th N. H., 12th N. H., 2d N. H., 36th Pennsylvania, 43d Massachusetts, 188th Pennsylvania, 21st Connecticut, 210th Pennsylvania, 19th Wisconsin, 11th Connecticut, 98th New-York, 24th Massachusetts. All of these regiments were preceded by full bands or drum corps, and carried beautiful new flags, emblazoned with the names of many historical battle-fields. Occasionally an old flag, tattered and torn into shreds, floated along the line.

Next to the infantry came Battery F, 5th United States Regulars, Third United States Battery, First Rhode Island battery, Third New-York Battery, Fourth Wisconsin Battery.

DISTINGUISHED ARRIVALS.

Among the noted arrivals in Richmond yesterday, we announce that of John Van Buren, son of President Van Buren, of the United States; Elisha Riggs, of the firm of Jerome, Riggs & Co., bankers; Mr. Parker, Griswold Gray, Parun Stevens, the Napoleon of hotel-keepers, Capt. Comstock and daughters, and others.

ILLNESS OF MRS. GENERAL LEE.

The Richmond Whig of April 11 says:

We are grieved to learn of the very serious indisposition of Mrs. Gen. Robert E. Lee at her residence in this city. The great disaster which has overtaken the Confederate arms has unnerved the great wife of the great General quite, and we do not wonder that her finely-strung nerves should give way in the struggle. Since the occupation of Richmond the Union authorities have acted with the most scrupulous regard for the feelings of Mrs. Gen. Lee. At first a colored guard was placed in front of the house on Franklin st., but upon it being represented that the exhibition was an insult to the lady of the mansion, the colored guard was withdrawn and a white guard substituted.

FLUNKEYISM.

The Whig of the 10th contains an extended account of a review in Richmond of 12,000 of our soldiers by Gen. Weitzel. The following paragraph is a part of the description:

"None of the colored troops appeared on review or parade on the occasion, but a separate display of them will probably take place before long."

A SECESH NAVY OFFICER.

To such as feel sick under this dishonoring and perilous flunkeyism in face of the Slave Power, let us give the comfort of a fact in Secretary Welles's Administration of the Navy Department. Last Sunday an Engineer in the Navy, seeing in Pennsylvania-ave. Rebel prisoners marching under guard of negro soldiers, coursed and raved against the indignity and wrong. He carried his slave-driving fury to the extent of offering a challenge to a newspaper correspondent who had mildly informed him that he was a disgrace to the service. The case of the secesh scoundrel, reported at the Navy Department and substantiated, received proper attention. Secretary Welles instantly dismissed him from the service.

GEN. SHERIDAN

His Part in the Five Days' Fighting.

From Our Special Correspondent.

GEN. SHERIDAN'S HEADQUARTERS, IN THE FIELD, WEDNESDAY NIGHT, March 29, 1865.

The cavalry command, consisting of Gen. Crook's Division and Sheridan's cavalry, moved out on the Jerusalem Plank-road this morning, about 3½ miles from Hancock Station, where they took the country road leading across the Weldon Railroad at Reams's Station, and into the Vaughn Road one mile from the Dinwiddie Court-House. Gen. Crook's Division going in advance. They reached Dinwiddie Court-House about 4 p. m., after some slight skirmishing on the way with Rebel cavalry, resulting in the capture of some 15 prisoners by our side. Gen. Devin camped on the Crump plantation, one mile from the Court-House, Gen. Custar being ten miles back on the road, in charge of the wagon trains, which were greatly delayed on account of the wretched condition of the roads.

In the mean time, the Fifth and Second Corps of Infantry had been moving in a parallel line on the Vaughn Road. Gen. Grant's headquarters to-night are on the Boydtown Plank-road, in the neighborhood of Gravelly Run. Gen. Sheridan's headquarters are at Dinwiddie Court-House. Reports are current this evening that Griffin's Division of the Fifth Corps had a fight with Bushrod Johnson's Division, driving them back and capturing about 100 prisoners, and inflicting a large loss in killed and wounded.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 30TH.

Rained very hard nearly all day, having commenced during the night. Roads in a terrible condition, and wagon-trains still ten miles in the rear, the whole of Gen. Custar's command being employed in corduroying the roads to get them along.

At 8 a. m., Merritt moved out on the road crossing White Oak Road, leading to the Southside Railroad—moved out three miles, skirmishing with the enemy's cavalry, until he reached Brooks's Corners with Devin's Division. There the Division was massed, and strong reconnoitering parties sent out on all roads leading to the Southside Railroad. From Brooks's Corners, three miles from Dinwiddie Court-House, the 5th and 6th regular Cavalry, under Major Morris of the 6th, were sent out on the road leading to the Five Forks, five miles distant. He moved out, skirmishing with the enemy until he crossed Chamberlain Bed Creek, where the enemy made considerable resistance, but were driven back within a half a mile of the Five Forks, where the enemy's infantry were found posted behind breastworks. Major Morris, in pursuance of orders, made strong efforts to drive the enemy and gain possession of the Five Forks, but after an hour's hard fighting, was obliged to send for reinforcements, as he had only about 140 men in his command, and was nearly out of ammunition.

In this fight he lost two officers wounded—Capt. Leib of the 5th, slightly, and Lieut. Denny of the 5th, severely; Lieut. Nolan of the 6th, captured; enlisted men killed, 3; wounded, 15, and missing, 14. At one period during the fight Maj. Morris was driven back, and these 14 men were dismounted before they could reach their horses. At this time Lieut.-Col. Lepper of the 6th Pennsylvania, commanding a detachment from his regiment and the 1st United States Cavalry and 1st Massachusetts Cavalry (Gen. Gibbs's Brigade), had been sent on the direct road to the White Oak Road, three miles distant. After he had proceeded about one mile a Brigade of Rebel cavalry, afterward ascertained to be Roberts's Brigade of William H. Lee's Division of Cavalry, was found in his front. Col. Lepper ordered a charge with the saber, and drove them in great confusion back to their infantry support on the White Oak Road, capturing twenty prisoners, including a Lieutenant-Colonel and Captain, and losing Capt. Cooles of the 1st Massachusetts, captured, and ten men killed and wounded.

Another reconnoitering party went out toward the White Oak Road, by the Five Forks, about a mile and a half distant from the route of each of the other parties, and consisting of the 1st N. Y. Dragoons, under Major Smith of Col. Fitzhugh's Brigade. They also pushed Barringer's Brigade of Rebel Cavalry to the White Oak Road, where infantry also was found behind breastworks. These reconnoitering parties had ascertained the position of the enemy, and Gen. Merritt, wishing to develope their strength, sent out a portion of the Michigan Brigade to the support of Col. Lepper, and Col. Fitzhugh's Brigade to the support of Major Morris, while Gibbs's Brigade was kept in reserve. Each brigade commander carried out the orders to the letter, made a fierce attack upon the enemy, ascertained their exact position, character and strength, captured a few prisoners belonging to Johnson's Divisions of Infantry, and then fell back one mile and went into camp, the total loss in Devin's Division being about 100 killed, wounded and missing. It rained very hard all day, the roads and ground everywhere being very unfavorable for field movements.

Gen. Sheridan is very well pleased with the result of the day's operations. The cavalry pickets communicate on their right with the pickets of the Fifth Corps on the left of our infantry line. Gen. Devin's Division is in camp in the neighborhood of Brooks's Cross Roads. Gen. Davies's Brigade of Crook's Division is camped about two and a half miles from Dinwiddie Court House, along the north bank of the Chamberlain Bed Creek, and communicating with Gen. Devin on his right. The rest of Gen. Crook's Division is at Dinwiddie Court-House. Gen. Custar is still in the rear, working hard to bring up the wagons.

MARCH, 31—6 a. m.—Wagons still stuck in the mud six miles back—Custar working like a Trojan to bring them forward. Raining very hard and roads almost impassable. Forage becoming scarce, but everybody in good spirits. Skirmishing between the pickets all along the cavalry line. Enemy evidently closing up, and disposed to fight. Sheridan disposed to gratify them.

1 a. m.—Fighting commenced by a portion of Gen. Smith's Brigade, Crook's Division, posted at the crossing of Chamberlain Bed Creek on the Dinwiddie Court House and Five Forks Road, the enemy evidently attempting to cross the creek and flank Gen. Davies. Gen. Smith's Brigade being ordered in, attacked them, drove them back in great confusion, capturing twenty prisoners, and killing and wounding a large number, the enemy leaving their dead and badly wounded on the ground. Failing in this attempt, they next attacked Gen. Davies, and succeeded in driving him back a short distance; but Davies, being supported by Col. Fitzhugh's Brigade, Devin's Division, he drove them back and reestablished the line. The enemy lost heavily in this attack, as they were very much exposed to the fire of our men, who were protected by the timber.

The enemy were evidently in strong force, and information received from prisoners proved that Bushrod Johnson's and Pickett's Divisions of Infantry and Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's and Gen. Wm. H. Lee's Divisions of Cavalry were in our front.

The enemy were now quiet for some time. About 11 a. m. they recommenced the attack along the whole line. Gen. Devin's Division was very much exposed to being flanked, a considerable portion of it being in advance of the rest of the command and without any support on the right. Our wagons having failed to come up, the cartridge-boxes were nearly empty.

Gen. Custar, who was back about six miles from Dinwiddie Court-House, was ordered to leave one brigade in charge of the wagon trains, and move rapidly to the scene of action. Before he could arrive, however, Gen. Devin began to retire. The whole of his men were fighting on foot (the nature of the country making it impossible to fight mounted.) About 3½ p. m., he was ordered by Gen. Merritt to retire on the Brooks's Road and cover the Boydtown Plank-road. He retired slowly and in good order, before the enemy, closely contesting every foot of the ground. The enemy then swung their left upon Gen. Davies's right and drove him back also, until they reached a point within about two miles of Dinwiddie Court-House. At this juncture, Gen. Custar's well-known flag was seen coming to the rescue His arrival was greeted with hearty cheers by the men of Gen. Crook's Division and Gen. Gibbs's Brigade, which had been cut off from Gen. Devins's left. Up to this time the enemy had succeeded by overwhelming numbers in driving back our whole Cavalry line, but with a terrible loss on their side.

Gen. Merritt ordered Gen. Custar into position, and this checked the enemy's advance, and they began throwing up breastworks.

The enemy did not seem disposed to continue the contest that night, and as darkness was approaching, our troops went into camp in their front. The result of the day's operations was decidedly to the advantage of the Rebels as regards position and ground gained, but they paid dearly for these, their losses being very large—definitely ascertained to be over two thousand killed and wounded, while our loss did not exceed four hundred killed, wounded and missing.

At this time the wagon-trains were still in the rear, coming up as fast as the roads could be corduroyed by the troops of Col. Wells's Brigade of Gen. Custar's Division, who were guarding them. ILLINOIEN.

From Our Special Correspondent.

GEN. SHERIDAN'S HDQRS., IN THE FIELD, Saturday Evening, April 1, 1865.

"Boot and saddle" sounded at 5 a. m. Morning clear and beautiful—all quiet along the lines. Everybody in good spirits. The horses had been fed, and ammunition having been served out during the night, the men all seemed anxious to go in again and regain the ground lost yesterday. Generals Sheridan, Merritt, and Custar rode out from their respective headquarters at and near Dinwiddie Court-House, down to the front and examined the enemy's line. They had thrown up breastworks and had a strong position under cover of the woods. About this time it was reported that the Fifth Corps (Gen. Warren) had been ordered to report to Gen. Sheridan, and that it was moving upon our right to attack the enemy.

The report soon spread among the cavalrymen, and they at once began cheering, and Gen. Merritt, finding them in the right humor, ordered an advance.

Gen. Devin took the road to Brook's Cross Roads, driving the enemy back and regaining the position held yesterday morning. Col. Stagg's Michigan Brigade marched out on Five Points Road, Col. Fitzhugh's Brigade being on his left. Gen. Devins's Regular Brigade remaining in reserve. At the Brooks's Cross Road the advance of the Fifth Corps joined Gen. Devin, and were massed in the field, near Brooks's House. At this time Gen. Sheridan and staff rode down the road. As soon as his presence was known the greatest excitement prevailed, and the Fifth Corps infantry pressed down to the sides of the road to get a sight at the conquering hero of the Shenandoah Valley. As he passed, they swung their caps in the air and cheered as long as he was in sight.

Gen. Merritt rode with Gen. Sheridan, and these two famous cavalry leaders appeared to be in earnest consultation. Gen. S. looked exceedingly belligerent. He rode his favorite horse—the one made celebrated by Buchanan Reade in his verses entitled, "Sheridan's Ride from Winchester." He is an enormous coal-black charger, very fleet and powerful. Sheridan, like Grant, is an inveterate smoker, and, as usual, he was indulging in the weed. The short, quick puffs of smoke, the sharp glance of his eye at the arms and accouterments of the troops, as he passed by them, and the quick gestures of his right hand showed the native energy of the man.

Gen. Merritt, a handsome young officer, was a Captain in the 2d United States Cavalry, was formerly Chief of Staff for Gen. Buford, and commanded the First Cavalry Division until the cavalry of the Shenandoah Valley started out on the first of March, when he assumed command of the cavalry belonging to Sheridan's army, which was selected for the late raid on the Virginia Central Railroad and James River Canal. He has an army reputation as a cavalry officer, second to none, and is admired by his fellow-soldiers for his gallantry under fire, and for the rare good judgment shown in the splendid manner in which he handles his troops on all occasions.

Gen. Custar had gone in with the Second Brigade of his Division, with Pennington's and Capehart's formed on the Dinwiddie Court-House and Five Points Road. The Second Brigade found the Rebels about two miles from the Court-House, and pushed them back until it crossed the Chamberlain Bed Creek, where it met with considerable resistance, but, about 1 p. m., joined Devin's left, he having driven the enemy back to within half a mile of Five Forks. Here the enemy made a stand and the firing became more rapid. All our men were dismounted except the Regular Brigade and 1st Michigan Cavalry (Lieut. Col. Maxwell.) A line was formed and an advance ordered, but very little progress was made at first. About half an hour later a gallant mounted charge was made by the 1st United States Cavalry, under Capt. Floyd, and the 1st Michigan, under Lieut.-Col. Maxwell. They drove the enemy's skirmish line and charged through the woods up to breastworks, where a heavy infantry line of the enemy was developed. They returned, bringing with them 160 prisoners, belonging to Pickett's Division. There was now a cessation of small-arm firing for a while, but the Rebels kept up a heavy fire from their batteries, the shot and shell from three batteries tearing and screaming through the deep pine woods like something infernal—I'll wondering what our side was waiting for.

At last a few shots were heard on our right and soon a crash of musketry showed where the Fifth Corps were engaging the enemy. The bugle sounded and the cavalry went in, and the contest soon became very severe. For about a half hour the firing raged furiously and many officers and men were brought to the rear wounded. Among these were Maj. Smith, 1st New-York Dragoons; Lieut.-Col. Maxwell, 1st Michigan, Major O'Keefe, 2d New-York; Lieut.-Col. Robinson, 3d New-Jersey; Capt. Drummond, 5th U. S. Cavalry, mortally; Capt. Norton, 2d Ohio; Lieut. Smith, 2d Ohio; Capt. Houghton, 2d Ohio; Lieut. Bosworth, 2d Ohio; Capt. Chester, 2d Ohio; Lieut. Hough, 3d N. J., killed; Lieut. Jenbourne, 3d N. J., wounded; Adjt. Stickles, 3d N. J., wounded; Lieut. Ackerman, 3d N. J., wounded; Capt. A. N. Parmlee, 1st Connecticut, wounded; Lieut. Byrne, 1st N. Y. Lincoln Cav., killed; Capt. Brownson, 1st N. Y. Lincoln Cav., killed. Some 300 enlisted men were killed and wounded.

At last, Gen. Merritt made the grand charge, the bands striking up Yankee Doodle, and above the howl of shot and shell and the crash of musketry, could be heard the huzzas of the dashing light cavalry. They moved steadily on and soon poured over the Rebel breastworks. At the same time the infantry marched upon the flank of the enemy, and Custar sent in Wells's and Carpehart's Brigade, mounted, and the whole force closed in around the confused and bewildered Rebels, who, almost en masse, threw down their arms and surrendered. Some 5,000 prisoners and muskets were captured. Gen. Custar, with his mounted command, pursued the remainder of the enemy until long after nightfall, when the recall was sounded, and our tired troops went into camp near and upon the battle-ground. The houses in the rear of the late Rebel lines were found filled with wounded. Our loss is estimated at about 300 infantry and 800 cavalry.

The loss in officers is said to have been more than usually severe, some 20 per cent of the officers in the Cavalry Corps being either killed or wounded. Many of the cavalry are only slightly wounded. Lieut. Boehn of Gen. Custar's staff was severely wounded.

Gen. Custar had a sharp fight with W. H. Lee's and Fitzhugh Lee's Divisions of Cavalry at one time, but they could not stand before his fiery onset, and were soon driven away. At one time Gen. Custar was charging at some distance in advance of his line of battle and narrowly escaped capture, but was rescued by a portion of the 1st New-York (Lincoln) Cavalry after the sharpest saber fight of the campaign. Gen. Custar exchanged pistol shots with the Rebel General.

The cavalry captured some 1,000 prisoners and two guns, taken by Col. Fitzhugh in person. The cavalry claim that a large number of the prisoners gave themselves up where the firing was "least effective in the infantry line."

I append full lists of the casualties in yesterday's and to-day's fighting—much the fullest lists that have yet been obtained. ILLINOIEN.
