PEAT. PEAT.

The value of peat as a fuel for manufacturing and domestic purposes, and the abundance of its supply in all parts of the Northern, Western, and Central States, are facts which have been satisfactorily demonstrated to the readers of The New-York Tribune.

Every day's experiment and observation increases our knowledge of its value, and of its inexhaustible abundance.

The great want which has been felt by the community in connection with these discoveries, was some process for the cheap, rapid, and easy manufacture of peat into fuel. This I have accomplished.

My machine is made under Will's Patent, with my own improvements, and I have so far tested its practical operations, that I am able to state the actual results which it yields.

With a 12-horse engine for a motive power, the machine which I have in operation is capable of turning out 100 tons of crude peat in 10 hours.

When the peat leaves the machine, it is in the form of bricks, to be carried away to dry.

The capacity of machines constructed on the same principle may be increased indefinitely, and at a slight cost.

The machine is simple in its construction, strong in all of its parts and easily understood and managed.

Every question as to its economical and rapid manufacture is answered by the experiments which I have made and are daily making.

My machine is located and in operation about three miles from the City of Springfield, Mass., and I shall be pleased to exhibit it and its products to any person interested in the manufacture of peat, or the production of cheap fuel. CHAS. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass.

E. B. BROWN & SON, Agents, No. 57 Cedar-st., New-York.

P. S.—I shall be happy to furnish conveyance to and from the depot to my place to persons from other towns who wish to examine the machine, if they will notify me one day in advance of their intended visit. C. D. L.

TO BUILDERS, CONTRACTORS and CAPITALISTS.—The attention of parties in the above line and the public generally, is invited to Jesse Abbott's Improved Patent Blind Fastener and Operator, being a valuable and full device by which Window Blinds can be opened and closed, or securely fastened in any position from the inside, obviating the necessity of raising the window.
