BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

The popular comic artist, Mr. Frank Bellew, has been employing his pencil and his pen upon a most excellent little book, which he calls by the appropriate name of "The Art of Amusing." It is a description of all sorts of merry pranks, comical tricks, charades, plays, puzzles, hoaxes, and funny devices, for the entertainment of social gatherings. Here you may learn how to make an elephant; to imitate thunder and lightning; to manipulate a Punch and Judy show; to become at will a dwarf or a giant; to convert your hat into an apple-woman or a dancing Highlander; to fire at a target behind you; to smoke a cigar under water; to manufacture various kinds of card puzzles; and finally, to do something much nicer and pleasanter than all the rest, for an explanation of which we refer our readers to the concluding chapter of the book. Mr. Bellew has done society a good service by his agreeably written and copiously illustrated little manual, and we trust it will find its way into every household where the wisdom of being foolish now and then is appreciated as it ought to be. The volume is published by Carleton.

The theory that Lord Bacon was the author of the plays attributed to Shakespeare—a theory which since Delia Bacon disappeared from the literary horizon, has been suffered to sleep in almost unbroken repose—has just been revived by Judge Nathaniel Holmes of Missouri, who has given us through the press of Hurd & Houghton an elaborate essay on "The Authorship of Shakespeare." Judge Holmes states that he was induced to examine the subject by reading Miss Bacon's article in Putnam's Magazine for January, 1856, and that finding the evidence in support of her theory "very considerable, and indeed quite amazing," he had thrown his notes into some form before the publication of Miss Bacon's "Philosophy of the Plays of Shakespeare Unfolded," in 1857. As the world refused to be convinced by her work, he now purposes to try what he can do. He goes somewhat further than Miss Bacon, however; for, while the lady maintained that the plays were the product of several hands, among which Lord Bacon had a leading share, the Judge endeavors to show that the whole genuine canon of Shakespeare was written by the great Chancellor alone.

Mr. Frazar Kirkland, whose mission in life seems to be the collection of anecdotes and their classification under distinct heads with as much precision as if they were specimens of natural history, has added to his former bulky two-volume "Cyclopedia of Commercial and Business Anecdotes," a "Pictorial Book of Anecdotes and Incidents of the War of the Rebellion." It contains a vast store of anecdotes, some very good, and some very much the reverse, and is illustrated with about 300 wood-cuts. It is clearly printed, in large type, and on good paper. The volume comprises 705 large octavo pages of two columns. (Hartford Publishing Co.)

"The City's Heart, by a Daughter of New-York," a poem of the school of "Nothing to Wear," has recently been published in a very pretty and attractive shape by Carleton. It rattles on, pleasantly enough, but has no very great smartness, and the rhythm lacks polish.

"The Truant Chicken," and "A Jolly Bear and his Friends," are two little poems by Charles Dawson Shanly, which have been characteristically illustrated by H. L. Stephens, and published in handsome illuminated covers, and with a prettily colored text, by Hurd & Houghton. They will no doubt give huge delight to the young folks.

Chapman & Co. have added to their "Sunny Side Series" of cheap novels, "The Ghost of My Husband; a Tale of the Crescent City," by W. Gilmore Simms. This we believe is the story originally published about 20 years ago under the title of "Marie de Berniere." The practice of reissuing old novels under a new name is virtually an imposition upon the public, and deserves the severest condemnation.

Frederic A. Brady has published "The Hardships of an Heiress," a novel, by Mrs. Gore.

Loring, Boston, has published "Milly; or, the Hidden Cross," a tale by Lucy Ellen Guernsey, author of "The Sign of the Cross," &c.

A new novel entitled "Woman our Angel," by that popular and prolific author, A. S. Roe, has just been issued by Carleton.

Doctor Felipe Larrazabal has written "The Life of Simon Bolivar, Liberator of Colombia and Peru, Father and Founder of Bolivia," the first volume of which has been printed for the author by Edward O. Jenkins, New-York. Dr. Larrazabal is an enthusiastic admirer of the Liberator, whom he styles a "prodigy among mortals." The biography is written with considerable minuteness, and purports to be founded upon authentic unpublished documents.

"The Rise and Fall; or, the Origin of Moral Evil" (Hurd & Houghton), is an inquiry, by an anonymous writer, into the question, "in what way and under what circumstances was moral evil originated in or introduced into the world." The solution to this inquiry he finds in his inspired record of Genesis; but from the suggestions of reason and the principles of theology he seeks to draw confirmation of the justness of his interpretation of the Bible.

Carlton & Porter have issued a "Statistical History of the First Century of American Methodism," by the Rev. C. C. Goss. It gives a brief chronological record of the most important events in the history of the church, from its first introduction into the United States to the present time, and for the purpose of comparison gives side by side with the statistics of Methodism similar figures to show the condition of other denominations at the same time. Details are also presented of the present membership, ministry, schools, Bible and tract societies, missions, and other institutions of the church.

The American translation of Darras' "History of the Catholic Church," which Mr. O'Shea, of No. 27 Barclay-st., is publishing serially, has now reached its 41st number, and will very soon be completed, forming, when bound, four elegant octavo volumes. It is finely printed, with large, clear type, on good paper.

The Rev. R. C. Shimeall, of the Presbytery of New-York, is the author of a work entitled "Political Economy of Prophesy; with special Reference to its Relation to the History of the Church" (John F. Trow, printer), in which he undertakes to prove that Napoleon III is the destined Antichrist.

Scribner, Welford & Co. publish a neat, compact little "Index of Diseases and their Treatment," by Dr. Thomas Hawkes Tanner, of the Royal College of Physicians. It is intended for the use of practising physicians, especially in the treatment of cases which do not yield to prescribed remedies as readily as might be expected. The diseases are mentioned in alphabetical order, and to make the diagnosis sure a brief description is given of each. The proper treatment to be pursued and prescriptions to be exhibited are mentioned with great conciseness and with all the particularity which need be desired.

W. A. Townsend has issued "The Physician's Handbook of Practice for 1867," by William Elmer, M. D.—the tenth annual edition of a publication which has always met with a good deal of favor. It contains several important additions and improvements.

"The Independent Liquorist," by L. Mounet (New-York: John F. Trow & Co.), not only teaches the wine-merchant, the bar-tender and the private dispenser of social drinks how to make imitation champagne, peach-brandy, cherry-brandy, bitters, cordials, punches, toddies, beer, flip, extracts, essences, and cocktails, but supplies thrifty housewives with directions for the manufacture of various catsups, jams, and jellies, which have no apparent relation to the business of a "liquorist." The author informs us, in a modest preface, that "as a practical manufacturer he has no superior in this country," and that liquor dealers who have been fortunate enough to secure his services have realized fame and fortune from the venture.

The United States Sanitary Commission, at its session in July, 1865, resolved to employ such literary and clerical assistance as might be necessary to prepare a final history of the organization. The work was to be issued in three parts: First, a general history of the Commission's origin, purposes, and methods of operation. Second, a narrative of its special relief service. Third, an account of the organization and practical working of its supply system. The first part, prepared by Mr. Charles J. Stille, has just been published, in a very handsome octavo volume, by J. B. Lippincott & Co. As the final general report of an organization of which our people have such good reason to be proud, and as the record of a work in which individual sympathies were so warmly enlisted, it will be read with deep interest.

Mr. Larton Dunham Ingersoll has compiled a record of Iowa patriotism in the form of a history of each of the fifty-odd regiments which that noble State contributed to the Army of the Union during the late war. His book, entitled "Iowa and the Rebellion," forms a large octavo of 740 pages, and is published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.
