UNION MEETING AT GLASSBOROUGH.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 2.—A large and enthusiastic Union Republican meeting was held this evening at Glassborough, and addressed by the Hon. James M. Scovel and others.

THE COURSE OF THE STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

To the Editor of The N. Y. Tribune.

SIR: A correspondent in yesterday's TRIBUNE, dating at Paterson, reflects upon the course of the State Executive Committee as characterized by "shameful apathy or something worse." It is not my object to enter upon a defense of the Committee, but to assure our earnest friends except here that there is no reason for discouragement. There has seldom been a campaign in this State when more persistent efforts were used by those having the duty in charge to effect a thorough organization in every ward and township. If documents have not been distributed as liberally as on former occasions, it is because, after thorough effort, the necessary means could not be procured. The wisdom of the policy of leaving each District to its particular representative on the Committee has been doubted. It was adopted by the majority, and submitted to after two subsequent efforts at reconsideration. Notwithstanding this alleged "disbanding" of the Committee, the organization has been pressed and every duty performed that can be interpreted as not interfering with the rights of Districts. The state of affairs is better than your correspondent imagines. Notwithstanding the difference of opinion in reference to the plan of campaign, the ardor and patriotism of the Union party will prevent the result of the election from being materially affected. We fully expect to elect four of the Republican members of Congress, with well-grounded hopes of the fifth, beside securing a majority in the Legislature.

Respectfully yours, CHAS. P. SMITH,
Chairman State Executive Committee.

Trenton, Oct. 29, 1866.

THE FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

John Hill, esq., the Union candidate from this District, has been actively and thoroughly canvassing among his future constituency, and finds the people wide awake in the support of Congress as against the Johnson policy. Mr. Hill, accompanied by a band of music, has gone through Morris, Passaic and Sussex Counties, addressing large and enthusiastic meetings. Through the iron-mining district the miners poured out to his meetings, clad in their working-clothes and with the candles in their hats, and evinced the closest interest in the speaker's discussion of the tariff and other national questions. The laboring men will vote right upon Tuesday next, and the indications are good for the success of the Union candidate. The soldiers' vote is solid for Mr. Hill.

VERMONT.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The vote on the Constitutional Amendment in the House was 201 to 11, several members who were absent having since returned and recorded their votes in the affirmative.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON AND THE NEW-ORLEANS MASSACRE.

[From The Daily News, Oct. 20.]

Mr. Johnson has not only failed to recommend his reconstruction policy to the people of the Northern States, but he has been exceedingly unfortunate in that policy itself. The New-Orleans riots of the 30th July directed universal attention to the character of the reconstructed Governments of the Southern States; and the foolish efforts of Mr. Johnson and his friends to lay the blame of those riots on the Radicals of the North rendered a full and complete inquiry into them absolutely needful. So loud and persistent were the charges brought against the Radicals, and so pertinaciously did Mr. Johnson's organs call them the "Radical riots," that public opinion was at first inclined to cast some blame upon the Republican party for the provocation to riot it was supposed to have given. Gen. Sheridan's dispatches, however, did much to remove the feeling; and when it was discovered that those dispatches had been garbled at Washington, and that a passage directly charging upon Mayor Monroe the instigation of the riots had been suppressed, Mr. Johnson's supporters were obliged to change their tone to one of apology, and the suspicions they had endeavored to cast on their opponents fell back upon themselves. From that time there has been but little doubt as to the responsibility of Mr. Johnson's policy, if not of his Government, for the events of that disgraceful and disastrous day. Gen. Sheridan, in the suppressed portion of his dispatch, described it as not a riot, but a massacre by the Mayor and his police. Yet, even so late as the 8th of September, the President distinctly and repeatedly asserted, in his speech at St. Louis, that the riot was planned in the North, that the present "Radical Congress" was at the bottom of it, and that "every drop of blood that was shed rests upon their skirts, and they are responsible for it." Three days before those words were spoken the Military Commission which had been appointed to investigate the affair had completed its labors, and sent the result of them to Washington in an able and strongly-worded report. The first thing which Mr. Johnson must have found on his return from a tour in which he had everywhere charged the massacre on the sufferers and their friends, was this report distinctly tracing it to his own nominees. But he made no sign of change of opinion or policy. He had ostentatiously patronized the "constituted authorities" of New-Orleans, and had identified himself with them, and here was an authoritative and official report distinctly laying the guilt of an organized and premeditated massacre on those authorities, and not only justifying all that Gen. Sheridan had said about them a month before, but proving even greater guilt than Sheridan had suspected. The date of this report is Sept. 5, and it was not till Oct. 3, three days before the election in Pennsylvania, that THE NEW-YORK TRIBUNE succeeded in procuring a copy of it, and giving it to the public. For nearly a month it was suppressed, although, so far as we can see, no advantage whatever resulted from the suppression. Mr. Johnson's cause was lost without this authoritative exposure of the results of his policy; and the keeping back of this report only exhibits him in the attitude of standing by his friends at the very time when the character of those friends is seen in the most disastrous light. By attempting to screen the New-Orleans "authorities," Mr. Johnson has brought upon himself a share of the blame, and on his policy all the condemnation that is cast on them. The very fact that in the face of such accumulated evidence Mr. Johnson charged Congress with the responsibility, makes his reluctance to publish the evidence only the more condemnatory of himself. Mr. Sumner, of course, throws back the charge, and declares that the whole responsibility of the massacre lies at Mr. Johnson's door; and Mr. Johnson, by his unwise and bigotted adherence to a policy which has failed, and to the men who have abused his confidence, invites a hostile verdict from the public. He set the example of recrimination, and has now given his opponents a splendid opportunity to follow it.

They have but to print his speeches side by side with the report of his own Commissioners, and, from the comparison between them, the conclusion naturally and irresistibly follows that Mr. Johnson charged his opponents with the crime in order to shield his own guilty friends. He has thus identified himself with such men as Mayor Monroe in the South, just as he has with Clymer and Hoffman in the North, and the people judge him by the company he keeps. They are condemning his policy not for his usurpation of powers unknown to the Constitution, nor for his mere desire to infringe on the prerogatives of Congress—these things might have alarmed the statesmen, but might not have roused the people. But this patronage of men who are avowed enemies of the Union; this fraternization with men capable of planning and carrying out the massacre of their political opponents, has stirred the feelings of the people and roused their indignation as no mere constitutional encroachments could. Mr. Johnson's friends have so industriously sown the wind that both he and they may have to reap the whirlwind.
