THE DRY GOODS TRADE.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 27, 1866.

There is little to be said respecting this branch of business, transactions at the close of the year being merely nominal. During the last day or two there has been a perceptible softening in the prices of cotton goods. New-York Mills Shirtings have been reduced to 37½c., but at these goods have for some time been regarded as exceptionally higher and the reduction has been expected, the change in price of such an important brand of goods has not materially affected the market for other bleached goods.

In consideration of the generally nominal amount of business, we omit remarks in detail upon the several classes of goods, and append a list of current quotations among the jobbers.
