MT. ZION INSTITUTE.

On account of a threatened epidemic of influenza, Mt. Zion, by order of the board, acting on the advice of physicians, has closed until after the Christmas holidays. A badly heated building, together with inclement weather made the risk of pneumonia too great. Health is worth more than books.

Teachers and pupils are preparing for the greatest festival of the Christian year. Mt. Zion offers all good wishes to each and every one. May this Christmas be a time of good cheer and thankfulness—and for how much do the people of Mt. Zion have to be thankful? For life and health; for food and raiment and shelter; for friends; for churches; for schools—for everything that makes life worth while! We are blessed beyond measure, and if we have received freely, shall we not give freely? Christmas ought to be a time for giving not less than getting. Mt. Zion cannot wish a better thing than that each of her children shall make possible "a merry Christmas" for some one else.

The sixth grade had a perfect attendance for the third month of the school year. Not one child was absent or tardy. We congratulate the grade. Perfection is always admirable. How many pupils will do likewise for the fourth month?

Influenza prevented the third grade giving the play in preparation for which they and their teacher, Miss Maggie B. Turner, had worked so hard. Everything was ready when the orders for closing school came. The play will be given when school opens, and Mt. Zion asks the people of Winsboro to attend it. This entertainment was a big thing in the eyes of the third grade, and their disappointment was very great. We know that we can depend on Winsboro to make a success of the play when it is finally given.

The boys and girls from the various colleges are beginning to "filter in" for Christmas. We are glad to see them every one. All are singing the praises of their respective colleges—and that is as it should be. May we not hope, however, that they will not forget that Mt. Zion made it possible for them to go to college? Mt. Zion is entitled to their first love and loyalty. She took them when they were six years old and kept them until they were seventeen. She taught them to read—that is, opened to their young eyes the broad field of knowledge. The colleges may be their guardians; Mt. Zion is more—she is their mother. We do not ask them to love their colleges less. We ask them to love Mt. Zion more.

And we speak not to students alone, but to men and women everywhere. Why are people so willing to help the colleges and so careless of the graded schools? Should Winsboro, for instance, be more interested in Winthrop, or Converse, or Clemson, or Wofford, or Furman, than she is in Mt. Zion? It seems to us that Mt. Zion is a potent influence—good or bad—in the lives of the children of this town. Then all the colleges whatsoever. "It seems," did we say? Nay, we meant to say, "It is!" Nobody can gainsay it. The common schools have a right to a larger share of the love of the people than they have received. Their services have merited it. Is he who nurtures the tender plant less a gardener than he who cares for the flower alone. There never was a rose without a plant—and the sturdiness of the plant determines the beauty of the flower. The common schools break the ground, plant the seeds and care for the tender sprouts; the colleges develop the blossom. Which renders the greater service?

"They also serve who stand and wait."

GOOD POULTRY AT CHESTERFIELD

Clemson College, Dec. 13. That South Carolina poultrymen are making rapid strides in breeding high quality poultry has been well illustrated at the various poultry shows and fairs this year, and one of the best of these illustrations was the Rhode Island Red show by the recent Chesterfield fair. The poultry at this show was judged by Mr. W. H. Cord, of Manchester, Conn., a noted authority, who praised the show very highly. Here is what Judge Cord said about the Reds:

"This show ranks with Boston and with New York. It is better than Syracuse, and I doubt if there is another county in the United States that has as many Reds as fine in color, shape, and size."

"Everybody is anxious at the present time to know where to buy breeding stock, hatching eggs and baby chicks," says N. R. Mehrhof, Extension Poultry Husbandman, in commenting on Judge Cord's statement. "The beginners and the experienced poultry raisers are making plans for the coming year; and each one who hopes to be successful should buy only from reliable breeders, for to be successful we must start right."

"But it is not necessary for South Carolinaans to go out of the state for good poultry stock, as is proved by Judge Cord's testimony about Reds. The same is true of other breeds. We have good stock in many counties. The Extension Service is in position to put all who desire foundation stock, eggs, or chicks in touch with our own breeders."
