NEW PUBLICATIONS

MAGAZINES.

Chicago sends us the second number of the Art Journal, containing some average steel engravings.

The monthly number of Appletons' Journal for August affords an excellent idea of the great variety of clever writing, striking illustrations, and pleasant miscellaneous matter which have secured for this journal its marked success.

The Riverside Magazine for September contains a variety of juvenile articles, well maintaining the original standard of the magazine, and likely to be of peculiar interest to its youthful circle of readers. The typographical execution, now as always, is admirable.

The union of The Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly seems to work well. The Journal continues to contain its old features, and caters well for its special class of readers, while Mr. Packard, preserves for his part of the magazine the crude vigor, dash, and Young American go-ahead which were so characteristic of his Monthly when published in separate form. The present number contains 24 articles beside editorial items, and is thus seen to have an abundance of variety, as well as no little force and boldness.

Hours at Home appears for the next to the last time in the September issue. Early in October the Scribners will issue for November the first number of the new series of Scribners' Monthly, to be edited by Dr. Holland. The magazine, whose dying numbers still remain, attracts, therefore, but little attention, although it contains several articles of merit, prominent among which are the extracts from Charlotte Bronte's Letters, secured by Mr. Bigelow; a Poem and a clever prose Sketch, by "H. H.;" an article on "The New Education," by Horace Bushnell; and another on "Other Worlds than Ours," by Maria Mitchell.
