LITERARY ITEMS.

The publishers of Every Saturday are taking special pains to make that journal more and more worthy of the signal favor with which it has been received by the reading public. The present number is an admirable illustration at once of their success and of their just claims to still further prosperity. It is full of excellent engravings, many of which have been prepared exclusively for it, and of reading matter a large part of which is also original. At the same time it retains its old eclectic features, and thus furnishes an excellent compendium of the best both of American and foreign literature.

Mr. Mortimer Collins reports in one of the English magazines a curious bit of criticism on Macaulay's "Lays of Ancient Rome," made by the poet Wordsworth in a conversation with Mr. Crabb Robinson and Mr. Collins while these gentlemen were paying him a visit at Rydal Mount in 1848, six years after the publication of the Lays. The old laureate of the Lakes said that they should have been called "Lays of Modern Athens;" that they were utterly untrue both in character and costume, and that they were Scotch, not Roman.

CHARLES DICKENS:
THE STORY OF HIS LIFE.
BY THEODORE TAYLOR.
"Author of "The Life of Thackeray."
WITH
SEVERAL FORTRAITS OF MR. DICKENS, A FAC-SIMILE OF HIS WRITING, AND VIEWS OF HIS DIFFERENT RESIDENCES.
8vo., Paper, 50 cents.

Mr. Theodore Taylor has executed his task—far from an easy one—with taste and judgment. He has clearly had opened to him some special sources of information, and has used them with singular good sense. Anecdotes seem to have poured in upon him from all quarters.—[London Standard.

A record of the incidents in a career full of labors, full of triumphs, and almost exceptionally full of friendships. * * * The volume, in truth, is a faithful account of every event in the life of Dickens, social, domestic, or literary, which can interest the reader.—[London Daily Telegraph.

Contains a great deal of interesting matter. * * * Mr. Dickens's career is traced in this volume accurately and in detail.—[London Observer.

This "Life of Dickens" deals with a wonderful number of facts stretching over the long public life of the great author who has just left us. * * * We have nothing for it but commendation. * * * The long and brilliant career traced in these pages is a very striking one. * * * The book before us is an example of rare good taste. There is in it none of the impertinent curiosity which sometimes prompts biographers to deal with surmises and guesses, with which the outside public have really nothing to do.—[Echo (London).

* * * It is full of anecdote.—[Graphic (London).

HEAR THE CRITICS.

REMARKABLE BOOK!
MOST ORIGINAL!
THE STAR ROMANCE OF THE TIMES!
PERDITA;
OR,
FAIR AND FALSE.
BY FAIRFAX BALFOUR.

"And for the babe
Is counted lost forever, Perdita.
I prithee, call it."—SHAKESPEARE.

This work achieved unbounded popularity when passing through the columns of one of the most famous English weeklies—and when published in book form, met with almost universal encomiums. We append a few extracts from the numerous critiques which followed its appearance:

* * * Had Balfour given us nothing else, he might proudly await the verdict of a literary jury—certain that the heartiest approval would be elicited by this remarkable book.—[Saturday Review.

"Perdita" is decidedly the most original, as it certainly is the most powerful, romance we have read for a long time. Its fault—for it is not faultless—is, that events are too much crowded. Most writers elaborate too much; they give us gold leaf—Balfour gives us the precious ore in great nuggets.—[London Examiner.

* * * Finally, if a plot of startling strangeness, characters drawn as with the etching point of Albert Durer, and landscape painting in words, that rivals Claude's pencils—if, we say, these qualities will make a great romance, then is "Perdita" the star romance of the times.—[London Spectator.

The fortunes of the little beggar-girl are followed, step by step, from the moment that she draggles her bare feet in the green morass, until she glides, satin-shod, over the nature-rivaling carpets of the richest Wilton. Strongly contrasted, too, by those Huns and Goths of civilization, the worst criminals of London.—[London Lancet.

"Perdita" is handsomely printed on fine white paper, and makes an exceedingly neat octavo volume.

PRICE FIFTY CENTS.
