REPORT OF INSURANCE COMMISSIONER OF MASSACHUSETTS. PART II. LIFE INSURANCE. 8vo. Boston.

Massachusetts is the State in which the superintendence of life insurance by the Government was inaugurated, and the publication of this document is always an event of great interest in the insurance world. The present Massachusetts Commissioner is the Hon. Julius L. Clarke. His predecessor, the Hon. John E. Sanford, published, as an appendix to his report for 1868, a collection of letters in regard to the Distribution of Surplus in Life Insurance Companies. In continuation of this discussion, Mr. Clarke publishes with the present report a letter from Mr. James F. Lyman upon the same subject. Mr. Lyman attempts in it to show that what is called the percentage system, though now almost universally abandoned in this country, and denounced by nearly all the actuaries, is the system under which the insurance principle has the most complete operation. He argues that if dividends are made upon the contribution system, the dividends are made in a method that is incompatible and incongruous with the rest of the contract between the company and the insured. Hence the exact justice said to be wrought upon the contribution system is a chimera. Equity is really done upon the percentage system, because each policy-holder's chances of receiving dividends correspond with his contributions to the surplus, just in the same way that the chances of receiving the sums insured correspond with the premiums paid. The companies that adopt the percentage system can, therefore, other things being equal, furnish insurance upon better terms than those who adopt the contribution plan. The object of insurance is the distribution of loss, and it is more completely carried out upon that system than upon any other. In fact, when a Life Insurance Company is upon the contribution plan, so far as its dividends are concerned its accumulations enure for the benefit of the long liver, and it partakes of the nature of a tontine. But a tontine is an injurious lottery, devised for the aggrandizement of an individual, while life insurance is a beneficial institution, designed for the relief of man's estate.

A new series of Short Studies on Great Subjects, by JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, M. A., has been published by C. Scribner & Company, containing the author's discourse on "Calvinism," review of Father Newman on "The Grammar of Assent," "Condition and Prospects of Protestantism," "On Progress," and other miscellaneous papers, marked by the well-known qualities of his brilliant and versatile pen, but with a tendency to paradox that often impairs the confidence of the reader in the soundness of his conclusions.

Stories from Old English Poetry, by ABBY SAGE RICHARDSON (Hurd & Houghton). The merits of this pleasant volume for young readers consist in the felicity of the selections, and the excellent taste with which they have been wrought up into modern narratives without destroying the flavor of the original. The stories are taken chiefly from Chaucer, Spenser, and Shakespeare, and although it may seem a bold experiment to present them in a different costume from that in which they were dressed by their authors, the most fastidious reader need not be shocked by any perversions of their significance, while those who have not ventured so far into the depths of our antique song will delight in their rehearsal by such a skillful artist.

An abridgment of President Noah Porter's elaborate work on "The Human Intellect," under the title of Elements of Intellectual Science, has been issued in a neat and compact volume by Charles Scribner & Co. The leading positions of the original work are retained, with many of the illustrations by which their exposition was enlivened, although the language is, to a certain degree, condensed, and some changes are introduced into the order and method of the argument. The topics that demand too great an exercise of thought for an elementary work have been altogether omitted, while but little space has been devoted to critical or controversial suggestions. In our judgment, the work has been greatly improved as a manual for practical use by the process of excision which it has gone through, and it now presents the leading facts of intellectual science, from the author's point of view, with clearness and vigor, though without the ample surroundings which impaired the effect of the volume in its original form.

A selection from the Speeches of Fisher Ames, in the United States Congress from 1789 to 1796, edited by PELHAM W. AMES, is published by Little, Brown, & Co. With the exception of the speeches on the British treaty, and on President Madison's commercial resolutions, the contents of this volume now appear in print for the first time. The eloquence of Fisher Ames is surrounded with the splendors of historical tradition, but few readers of the present day, however, are familiar with the promotions which anticipated the achievements of Clay, and Calhoun, and Webster. It is curious to compare the oratory of that early period with the efforts of the statesmen whose speeches have won such wide celebrity in a subsequent age. Mr. Ames was mainly indebted for his triumphs in the Senate to the earnestness of his convictions, and the ardor of his patriotism. His speech was intense, vehement, often burning with a volcanic glow, but always chaste and dignified in tone, never descending to any arts of popular rhetoric, and clothed in a classical and polished diction which has not since been rivaled by any of the eminent masters of expression in our parliamentary literature. The present volume is seasonable, and will be welcomed with satisfaction by the student of American history, and the lover of deliberative eloquence.

JOSHUA MARVEL.
BY E. L. FARMAN.
Author of "Golf." 1 vol. 12mo. Paper, 75 cents; Cloth, $1 25.
This novel has elicited almost unanimous and very hearty praise from the English press. It is compared to Dickens's most characteristic stories, and is welcomed as a novel of profound interest and excellent moral tone.
"The tender treatment of the romance of humble life, the optimism which discerns good even latent in uncouth lumps or rough humanity, the purity which was Dickens's unvarying and noblest characteristic, are all present in the work of his disciple. * * * Something more than pen, ink and paper has been brought to the execution of this thoroughly interesting story, and something better than a sense of literary dissipation may be experienced as the result of its perusal. A capital love-story runs its course through the chain of adventure, and forms a basis for the development of the pronounced varieties of character involved."—[The Athenæum, (London.)
"We cordially recommend the story as one of those literary treats that have become painfully rare since the death of Dickens."—[London Morning Advertiser.

This single volume includes all that was contained in the three volumes, in which Mr. Longfellow's Translation was originally published. It brings within reach of all this masterpiece of poetical translation which he has unquestioned the highest rank as an English rendering of Dante.
THE AMERICAN NOTE-BOOKS OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

This is the seventh volume of the Illustrated Library Edition of Hawthorne's Works, which has been received with marked favor by the press and the public.
