THE PEACH CROP.

AN ABUNDANT YIELD EXPECTED—CHEERING REPORTS FROM NEW-JERSEY, DELAWARE, AND MARYLAND.

From The Philadelphia Press, May 6.

This morning we give an accurate report of the present condition and coming prospects of the peach crop of the orchards in New-Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland, which may be said to be the home of this luscious fruit. Based upon the personal observation of our correspondents, who, living in the midst of the districts in which peach culture has been brought to the greatest perfection, are fully competent to estimate the probable yield and the likelihood of a decrease or increase in the amount shipped to market. The tenor of our dispatches is to the effect that the late cold weather, though delaying the season somewhat, had not materially affected the fruit-germ, as the vitality of the embryo leaf had not progressed to such an extent as to be affected by the low temperature. In Delaware it is shown that very few blossoms have been killed, so that the prospect for a full and even unexampled crop was never better than at present, and that in those sections where the most injury was supposed to have been done the damage is inconsiderable. As the cold spell has continued to the present time without materially affecting the growth and yield of the fruit, though frost and heating rains in the mid-day of the last month have occasionally done great damage, we cannot but hope that the perilous period is past, and that the anticipations of those engaged in peach-growing will be abundantly realized. The backwardness of the season in Delaware, which is almost wholly devoted to the raising of fruit, especially peaches, caused the growers to almost despair of the result, but the present encouraging prospect has dissipated their fears and caused them to look forward to the coming Summer with the liveliest anticipations of profit as the result of their care and labor. In Kent and Sussex Counties, Del., although the buds have been somewhat damaged, the opinion prevails that a good crop will be harvested, although about two weeks later than in former years. New-Castle County also sends cheering reports, the only failures spoken of being in one or two localities, and those only partial. In Atlantic County, N. J., the trees are full of buds and look strong and healthy, not having been injured by the early weather. In Cumberland the present appearance and condition of the trees warrant the most sanguine anticipations. Monmouth has suffered somewhat, but as the crop is generally uncertain in those parts it cannot be said in what the greatest damage has been done, the general result throughout the State will not be affected by the smallness of the yield. The best returns come from Salem, which reports the promise excellent. In these portions of Maryland covered by our dispatches the same good news is received. On the whole, although a certain degree of caution is observable in the information sent us from all points, which reflects credit on the judgment of our reporters, who desire to give the facts with accuracy, the outlook may be considered most promising for the epicurists, the canners, and the public generally.
