SUMMER RESORTS.

hereditary. Their fathers for generations back were fishermen and whalers and sailors, and the boys are broken in as soon as they can walk.

Greenport, directly opposite this Sound, and about one half of a mile north of the hotels, was a great whaling port 30 or 40 years ago, but kerosene oil has deprived it of its glory. But Greenport is a popular place in Summer. Many of the New York and Brooklyn yachts during their Summer cruise stop there for a few days.

Camp-meeting begins at Sag Harbor Island on July 13. A billiard saloon and bowling alley have been started this year very near the camp-ground, and will hardly help the devotional exercises.

WATERING PLACE NOTES.

The Rev. Thomas K. Beecher will spend a couple of months in the Adirondacks. He will be accompanied by his brother James. They are to "camp out," and will start in a week or so.....Secretary Belknap's family are at West Point, where he spent a few days with them previous to his departure for the West on a tour of inspection.....There is nothing new in the Lake George trip, and nothing new in the hotel line, except perhaps a slight reduction in prices, a few improvements, and a year or two added to the age of the ruins since they were last written up.....Havana, in Schuyler County, N. Y., situated amid a beautiful country, only three miles distant from the head of Seneca Lake, and nineteen from Elmira, is bountifully supplied with everything needed to make a successful Summer resort. Some of its attractions are the Magnetic Springs, its glen and gorges, the first-class hotels, and a people well stocked with legends and ghost stories.....The Hon. Francis S. Thayer, Auditor of the Canal Department, is spending the warm days with his family at Cambridge, Washington County, N. Y.....To those who have abundance of time and enjoy a tramp, the example of a gentleman of this city who drove through Troy recently on his way to the North Woods, followed by his sons on foot, is highly recommended.....Bishop Williams of Connecticut will spend a few weeks amid the beautiful scenes and bracing air of Lake George.

Guilford, Conn., is conveniently situated on Long Island Sound, within a few miles of New-Haven, and is a desirable place of Summer resort. The Rev. W. H. H. Murray of Boston is there with his horses and dogs to spend the Summer. Mr. Goodyear, of rubber fame, and Congressman Chittenden and family of Brooklyn, are also in the neighborhood.....Litchfield County, Conn., is highly praised for its purity of air, its delightful scenery, its Sabbath-like quietude, its freedom from fogs, malaria and mosquitoes—the first and last the pests of the seashore—and, more than all, the generous living which one is sure to find there. These attractions are being recognized, and every year the number of Summer dwellers is increased. One can hardly go amiss in choosing a Summer residence in Litchfield County, although some places are more favored than others, both as regards the "lay of the land" and the accommodations to be secured.

A new stage line from Gorham, N. H., to the top of Mount Washington and intermediate points in the White Mountains has been established. Gorham is a very pretty place, and commands a fine view of the surrounding country. A drive of a few hours will give the visitor a glimpse of the Berlin Falls, the Alpine Cascade, Shelburne Basins, the Emerald Pool, and numerous other objects of interest.....William M. Evarts has bought a fine piece of property at Cornish, N. H., on the Connecticut River. The site commands a fine view of the surrounding country, and looks down on Windsor, Vt., just across the river.....Rehoboth Bay and Beach, on the southern coast of Delaware, is a popular bathing-place. The Rev. Dr. Newman will spend a few days there, and preach at a camp-meeting which will be held in the neighborhood next week.

Bishop Andrews and family are to occupy a cottage at Shelter Island during a part of the Summer.....Salem, Mass., has a quiet reputation for pleasant surroundings, and is crowded with historical reminiscences. Visitors to this renowned city of witches may walk beneath grand old elms, sail or row on the beautiful harbor which almost surrounds the city, meander through the museum, or pass a pleasant hour in the rooms of the numerous literary or scientific societies.....Ex-Judge Fullerton is on a fishing excursion on the north shore of New-Brunswick.

THE COURTS.

CHANGES IN THE JEWISH RITUAL.

PROTEST OF A MEMBER OF THE CONGREGATION B'NAI JESHURUN—AN INJUNCTION AGAINST THE TRUSTEES DENIED.

Judge Larremore, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, denied yesterday the motion in the suit of Israel J. Solomon agt. The Congregation B'Nai Jeshurun, for an injunction restraining the trustees of that Congregation from making certain changes. The plaintiff claimed that the Congregation was organized for the express purpose of serving God according to the rites of the Polish Jews, and that the innovations proposed by the trustees, the chief of which were to have both sexes sit in the same pews, and to introduce an organ and choir, were not merely formal, but matters of substance in the views of those holding to the Polish rite. Judge Larremore decides as follows:

The plaintiff, a member of the religious incorporation B'Nai Jeshurun, seeks to enjoin the trustees thereof from making certain proposed alterations in the synagogue or church edifice belonging to said corporation. Such alterations, it is claimed, will not only affect his temporal rights as a pew-owner, but are intended also to change and subvert the established rules and spiritual usages of said incorporation, by permitting the promiscuous assembling of the sexes during divine worship. This religious society was incorporated in 1825, pursuant to the act of April 5, 1813, and its mode of worship has been in accordance with rites, customs, and usages of the Polish and German Jews. In the synagogue in Thirty-fourth st., which the members of the Society now own and occupy, the separation of the sexes during divine worship has heretofore been observed, the males occupying the ground floor and the females occupying the gallery of such edifice. Among the proposed alterations is the construction of pews in which members of the same family may sit together, and this the plaintiff insists, is immodest, unchaste, and unlawful, contrary to the discipline and rules of said congregation, and in violation of his rights as a pew-owner. It does not appear that the property now held by said society was acquired by it subject to any conditions as to the mode of worship to be adopted or continued. Nor is there anything to that effect in the certificate of sale of the pews purchased by the plaintiff. He thereby acquired an easement in the pews in question and the right to the exclusive occupation thereof, subject to such rules and regulations as said society might impose. That said society possessed the right to make changes in its mode of worship is shown by the fact that heretofore alterations in its ritual were adopted by the omission of some prayers and the transposition of others. If the separation of the sexes during divine worship be a cardinal principle of the faith possessed by this society, then a goodly portion of its membership have sanctioned a grievous error. But such a conclusion is not possible in view of the opposing affidavits, by which it appears that the question of faith involved is at least one of doubt. I leave it therefore, where it properly belongs, to the judicature of the church.

Nor can I hold, in face of the papers submitted, that the meeting held by said society, May 16, 1875, at which the proposed alterations were adopted, was irregularly convened, or the action then taken unlawful. In this particular the weight of evidence is with the defendant, showing not only that all qualified electors were duly notified of the time, place, and object of said meeting, and the minutes of its proceedings, but also the subsequent ratification thereof by the Board of Trustees of said society and by a large number of such electors. On this ground interference by injunction would be improper and unauthorized. Plaintiff's equities are denied by the answer, which was to the alterations contemplated are for the benefit and convenience of said society and for the increase of its revenue. Plaintiff has not sustained any pecuniary loss or damage by reason of the action of said society. If such shall hereafter prove to be the case, his remedy at law is ample. Thus much for the questions raised on the argument. Independent of the equitable defenses, which preclude a permanent injunction in this case, there is a statutory reason to aid us. By section 1 of the Act of April 5, 1813, the trustees of every church congregation or society are authorized and empowered among other things to take into their possession and custody all the temporalities belonging thereto, whether the same consist of real or personal estate, to hold and enjoy all charities, meeting-houses, and also to repair and alter the same and erect others if necessary. Said trustees shall also have power to make rules and orders for managing the temporal affairs of such church and to regulate and order the renting of pews therein (4 R. S., Edmonds' Ed., 687). The trustees of the Society B'Nai Jeshurun had a legal right to make the alterations in question without any action on the part of said Society. But such action having been taken in the first instance, and subsequently ratified by said trustees, is binding and conclusive upon the plaintiff and all the members of said Society.

The motion for a permanent injunction must therefore be denied.

BEQUESTS OF JOHN C. GREEN.

The will of John C. Green was admitted to probate yesterday by Surrogate Hutchings. By it the testator leaves his wife $600,000 in cash, his household property, including books, pictures, etc., in his house on Washington-square, and his country house on Staten Island, his pews in two churches, the house on Washington-square, with the connected lot running through to Eighth-st., in place of which she may take $60,000 in cash, a house and lot on West Tenth-st., and his house at Castleton, Long Island, with 23 acres around it. He makes an elaborate disposition of this property in case she should die before him, a contingency which has not happened. Had it happened, $200,000 of her share was to go to the Presbyterian Hospital, and $100,000 to the Presbyterian Home for Aged Women. The rest of her share was to go to double his legacies to his brothers and to other persons. To the three sons of Frederick T. Frelinghuysen he leaves property in Staten Island; to the College of New-Jersey, $100,000; to the Theological Seminary at Princeton, $50,000; and $100,000 to each of his brothers, with some minor legacies to relatives and friends.

He directs that, in case his estate is insufficient to meet all his legacies, his wife's share be first paid, next his legacies to relatives, and the public bequests last. All his residuary estate, whether from the lapse of some of his legacies or from a failure to dispose of the whole by his will, he leaves to his wife and to Caleb S. Green, Charles E. Green, and John T. Nixon, to hold jointly. The bequest is absolute, but he expresses a hope that they will, so far as they can, carry out the wishes they know to be his. He names as his executors his wife, Caleb S. Strong, Charles E. Strong, Robert Lenox Kennedy, Washington R. Vermilye, and Livingston K. Miller. His widow and Livingston K. Miller have already qualified as executrix and executor.
