WEDNESDAY, July 25—P. M.

In response to the better outlook, so far as the impression of violence is concerned, the stock market today exhibited more steadiness. This caused the carrying of some "shorts," so that toward the close all prices were higher. But it will be a mistake to construe the enforcement of order with an end to the great strike and a restoration of the usual business relations between the different parts of the country.

The volume of business to-day was reduced to a trifle over 100,000 shares, distributed through the list. The announcement of the withdrawal of the coal advertised to be sold at auction had a tendency to stiffen the prices of the coal shares. But the fact is overlooked that if the coal companies whose stocks are on the New-York Stock Exchange list are producing no coal, the price of it is of small importance to them, particularly as we are able to announce upon authority that the President of the Reading Company says there will be no strike or suspension of mining on its property. Of course, if the Reading Company is to be left without any competition in the coal trade, it can afford to make new terms with its miners, but we fail to perceive how that helps the suspended companies, whose interest and rentals continue to run in the same way as if the companies were fully occupied. There is no doubt that many of the recent "bulls" have been selling during the past few days, as well as to-day, all the stocks they could sell, without pressing upon the market any greater quantity than it would comfortably take. Thus by unequalled skill a panic has been averted, or at least postponed. The subjoined table shows the
