WARREN COURT OF INQUIRY.

CRAWFORD AND THE BROKEN LINE.

TESTIMONY SHOWING THAT THERE WAS NOT ANY CARELESSNESS ON THE PART OF WARREN OR HIS OFFICERS.

Contrary to expectation, General Crawford did not appear before the Warren Court of Inquiry yesterday, and the only witness called was Colonel Samuel K. Herr, of Westminster, Md., who was serving on General Crawford's staff at the time of the battle of Five Forks. Colonel Herr, after testifying to having carried orders from Crawford to his brigade commanders on the night of March 31, and after stating that when the division began to move before sunrise of April 1, Baxter's brigade retired from the vicinity of the Confederate works in line of battle, came to the events of the advance in the afternoon.

He said, that General Crawford understood perfectly what the movement was intended to be, and that he explained it to his staff. Upon coming to a road, Crawford said: "This is the White Oak road; here we are to begin our movement." Crawford was at this time on the right of Kellogg's brigade. Not long after crossing the road an officer informed Crawford that connection with Ayres had been lost, and the witness was sent to state the fact to General Warren. The latter sent the order to Crawford to "hold his left and swing around his right, moving rapidly." Crawford at once dispatched the witness to General Baxter, whose brigade was on the right, with instructions to watch his connection on the left, and swing his right around as quickly as possible. General Baxter used every exertion, and was greatly concerned in the execution of the order. On the way through the woods a skirmish line was encountered, and upon emerging into the northern part of the Sidnor field, Baxter's brigade met a heavy fire which paralyzed his line for a few minutes. Recovering themselves, the men advanced westwardly across the field, encountering a sharp fire from the edge of the woods which, however, did not check the advance. On the advance through the woods toward the Ford road, the line was again temporarily paralyzed by a heavy fire, but it quickly recovered as before.

Just as Baxter was emerging into the Young field, General Warren appeared riding in the ranks, and a part of Griffin's command was seen coming up from the rear and north. Generals Warren and Crawford held a short conference, and Crawford said to witness that Warren had ordered him to change front and move south directly upon the enemy's works. On the march down, Baxter still occupied a position in the extreme right. When within about 400 yards of the White Oak road, the witness discovered a force of Confederates rallying in the woods to the right. Fearing they would have a right fire on Baxter, he reported their presence to Crawford, who sent him to Baxter with instructions to throw back his right. Not finding Baxter, the witness gave the order to a Colonel Tilden, of a Maine regiment, who threw back his regiment and gave the enemy a volley or two, causing them to disappear. The right then became the line of march, and the movement was to the west. The right did not cross the White Oak road, but advanced to the edge of a clearing to the west of the Gilliam field, where the final halt was made.

The testimony of Colonel Herr was introduced in support of previous evidence going to show that General Warren did not allow the line of battle to be broken without exerting himself, as General Sheridan asserted in his statement to the Court.

The Court will meet this morning at 11 o'clock.

DISTINCTION.—Bobbs: "Well, Nobbs, how do you like the play?" Nobbs: "Ahem, how do you suppose a fellah can look at the play when all the opera-glasses in the house are on him?"

"HEARTLESS DISRESPECT FOR PEASANT PLEASANTRY.—Rural Postman: "Glad to see you down 'ere again, Mr. Jones. He've got a letter for yer from the young lady. I think. Fine girl, ain't she? Drink yer health, sir! Glad to see you alive still, sir." Jones (who does not appreciate gentle country familiarities): "I'm quite alive, Muggins; hand over the letters, or you may find I'm kicking as well."—[Fun.
