ALTON THORPE. A Novel. By LUCY N. JANKEY. 8vo. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

The fecundity of fiction seems to know no limit. New works of that class come in such numbers, and of such various quality, that it is hard to determine what is and what is not worthy of notice. The stories of Mr. Roe have won a great deal of popularity, which we suppose "A Day of Fate" will do nothing to diminish. Judged critically, it is a book of too much conversation and of too little narrative; there is too much preaching and moralizing; and although it is a love story, it has too much the flavor of a tract. But there are sweet and pleasant glimpses of the home life and of the religious sentiments of the Quakers which are among the best things in the volume. The love story which informs this volume seems to us a little stiff and wearisome; the current of the book does not move swiftly enough for the rapid readers of the present day; and although there is in it no little emotion, it is not of a kind which awakens the susceptibilities and touches the heart. Yet the book will please persistent readers, who like to have a good deal for their money, and who do not care how many hours they give to perusal.

"The Hour Will Come" is another of the clever translations of Miss Clara Bell, of whose version of "Brigitta" we have recently had occasion to speak approvingly. It is a story of convent life, strangely mixed with the sins and passions of the outer world. It is a romance of sorrow, of fate, and finally of tragedy—the time the Middle Ages—the scene the Tyrol—the actors, monks and nobles and peasants. The interest of the narrative is well sustained and the book is well worthy of the attention of the lovers of such literature.

The author of "Alva Vine" informs us in his preface that he has "read many books on American women." He has not been so fortunate, however, as to meet "with a written type of one class now rapidly developing in the United States." This remarkable person, it appears, must be "a girl with a good physique, a cultivated mind, a large heart capable of taking an interest in all that appertains to the welfare of the whole human family, as well as thoroughly womanly in the narrow and often too much confined circle of home." The story runs all over the world; sometimes the scene is in New-Jersey, sometimes in New-York, then in Paris, then in London. Alva, whose papa loses all his money, becomes a musical artist; in England she sees the Queen in a railway station, "a bouquet of flowers on the table before her, a book in her hand"; in Paris she encounters Napoleon III. and his wife. She tells us: "The Empress looked truly beautiful, and the Emperor less sardonic than his pictures." She then takes a trip to Bradford, Yorkshire, Bolton, Leicester, Lutterworth, Wickliffe, Matlock and Chatsworth, where she sees "magnificent specimens of malachite" and "a recumbent statue of Napoleon I." She also sits upon a bench "where Lady Jane Grey, with her tutor, Aylmer, had sat many a day." Subsequently she visits Windsor, where she sees a fine tabby cat, with a collar bearing the names of the little Princes, "Leopold and Arthur." Then she meets Mr. Thackeray, who is made to say "Music pierces past thought; we simply feel." Then she visits Jenny Lind, who "did not ask Alva to sing for her," and who said "Americans read the newspapers too much and drink too much water, which makes them dyspeptic." Miss Vine then comes home and gives music lessons, and says: "I think a great deal of time is lost unnecessarily in teaching vocal music." We fully agree with her. Ultimately she is married, as she might just as well have been in the middle of the book, and there is "a collation served in the style for which Delmonico is famous."

"Alton Thorpe" is a story of American life and manners, the scene shifting, as lately seems the fashion, to the other side of the Atlantic. There is little fault to find with this respectable book; there may be those who will find it interesting; to us it seems a little heavy and slow. There is the usual modern fault of too much talk, and most of the characters seem to have a propensity to lecture, however little they may have to say. But the book has merits of a kind which seem at present to be in demand.

MINES AND MINING.

MONDAY, Oct. 4—P. M.

At the opening of the mining share markets today there was quite a little boom for some of the stocks that recently have declined the most. But it was not sustained, and the special feature of the day's business was dulness. Of the Leadville properties, Little Chief early sold up 85 cents against 67 cents Saturday, but later it sold at 70 cents. Climax recovered from 85 cents to 92 cents, and then ended weak at 76@77 cents. Amie only rallied 1 cent to 57 cents and declined to 54 cents. Chrysolite made a final gain of 10 cents at 4.10, and South Hite rose from 95 cents to 1.05. Little Pittsburg selling at 2. The Comstock shares were dull and steady—Consolidated Virginia at 3.05 and California at 2.05. Battle Creek at first yielded 5 cents to 2.80, but later recovered to 2.85. The sales of Green Mountain were at 3.55@3.50, and at 3.70 buyer 60 days. Hukill sold at 1.85@1.90, closing at the highest figure, unchanged from Saturday night. Among the fancies, Silver nugget maintained its prominence in the dealings, but it was comparatively steady, losing only 1 cent in final sales at 45 cents. Vandewater was steady at 83 cents; Boston Consolidated rose from 80 to 90 cents; Buckeye recovered 1 cent to 19, but closed at 18 cents; Calaveras recovered 2 cents to 36 cents, and closed at 35 cents; Moose was 1 cent higher at 34 cents, and Great Eastern was 2 cents lower at 53 cents. About a usual amount of business was done in the higher price stocks—Best and Belcher at 9¾@9½, Mexican at 10@2¾, Ophir at 9@8¾, Union Consolidated at 19@19¼, Sierra Nevada at 11¼, Yellow Jacket at 4.90, Silver Cliff at 3 and Eureka Consolidated at 17. The market closed dull and steady.
