MR. CONGDON'S REMINISCENCES.

REMINISCENCES OF A JOURNALIST. By CHARLES T. CONGDON. 12mo. pp. xii., 393. James R. Osgood & Co.

A few months ago there lay upon our table a volume of reminiscences by a gentleman to whom fortune had been in some respects very kind. In a long life he had seen a great deal of the world, both at home and abroad; he had known many distinguished people; and his memory was well stored with interesting recollections. His book was one to be read with avidity; but it was hardly one to be read with pleasure. No things seemed to have fixed themselves more strongly upon his mind than the faults and foibles of the companions and preceptors of his youth. We love to think of afternoon as a time of serene and kindly feelings, when the asperities of the hours of toil and struggle are forgotten. But the author of the volume to which we refer chatted from his arm-chair in a censorious and ungracious temper, which made all his listeners uncomfortable. To such a budget of memories Mr. Congdon's cheery pages offer the strongest possible contrast. The readers of THE TRIBUNE who enjoyed these Reminiscences so highly when they appeared in weekly chapters in the Sunday edition of our journal, have no need to be told how genial and how gentle is the spirit which now addresses them. The bright, healthy tone of the book seems all the more admirable when we remember what manner of life it surveys. Please heaven it will be long before we think of our good friend and comrade as an old man, if one counts by years; but surely that may pass for a protracted career which covers so many stormy and critical periods, which has run with so many astonishing social changes and political revolutions, and which has been so closely interwoven with great National conflicts. Ever since the author's "small hands were blistered by beating the forms" with the old-fashioned ink-balls, in the New-Bedford printing office where his father worked off the 400 weekly copies of his newspaper, Mr. Congdon has been in the thick of the fight of journalism. He came to THE TRIBUNE in the fiercest heat of the anti-slavery contest; he devoted himself with a zeal and an energy unsurpassed to the defence of human liberty; and in the overthrow of the slave power, it was he, of all men, as Horace Greeley wrote, who "most skilfully, effectively, persistently wielded the trenchant blade of satire." The controversies of that time naturally aroused strong passions—an honest scorn, a noble indignation, an invigorating hatred and contempt for eminent political shams; and they left, as we all know, a residuum of bitterness in the character of many an amiable man who took part in them. But Mr. Congdon has passed through a generation of fighting without being soured by it. He has lived all his days in the turmoil of political journalism, sharing in all its excitements, hitting hard blows with the most strenuous of us; and he has kept the sweet composure of a gentle Christian philosopher. Herein we think lies much of the singular charm of his book. In drawing the portraits of other people, Mr. Congdon has unconsciously made a winning picture of himself.

The Reminiscences covers a vast variety of topics—politics literature, the life of an old whaling town, the stage, the pulpit, the interior of the newspaper office; they abound in felicitous sketches of character; they are rich in anecdote; they are flavored with a delicate humor; they are freely spiced with a mild, delicious gossip which never runs into garrulity. Those who read them in numbers will scarcely realize over how many pleasant fields they stray until they see the chapters collected. Unlike many papers of their class, they gain in effect by being brought together. They have been revised, moreover; much new matter has been added here and there; unfinished portions have been filled out and retouched, and an introduction has been written which is fresh and characteristic.

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW: Or, GLEANINGS FROM MY LIFE WORK. By JOHN B. GOUGH. 8vo. pp. 542. Hartford: A. D. Worthington & Co.

Mr. Gough's new book belongs to no recognized department of literature. It is neither biography, nor moral essay, nor narrative of adventure, nor fiction, but it is a pleasant medley of all four. A large part of it consists of sketches of life among the poor in London, and other fruits of his observations in the British metropolis. The numerous descriptions, humorous bits of dialogue, and amusing anecdotes which are characteristic of Mr. Gough's lectures abound also in his book; and even those who are not specially interested in the reform to which he has devoted so many useful years, will find entertainment in this record of his experiences.

DRIFTING. By T. BUCHANAN READ. Illustrated from Designs by Miss L. B. HUMPHREY. Small 4to. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

This poem of "Drifting" is one of the most delicious pieces of versification which came from the pen of Mr. Buchanan Read, admirably sweet and melodious as his poems almost always are. Lovers of this poem will be glad to have it in this luxurious form, although they may not entirely accept Miss Humphrey's graphic interpretations, which do not exhibit much force, and are neither very well engraved nor very clearly printed. Illustration has now become so common that it must be particularly good to arrest the public attention, especially in books which ought to give something above the average of the pictorial newspapers.

TROY: ITS LEGEND, HISTORY AND LITERATURE. With a Sketch of the Topography of the Troad in the Light of Recent Investigation. By S. G. W. BENJAMIN. With a Map. 8vo. New-York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

The author has here undertaken to give "a fuller version of the Trojan legend, without addition or important omission, as it was familiarly known to the ancients." Tale, though scattered throughout the writings of antiquity, is nowhere to be found in a complete form. We have the story from the beginning, with the romance of Helen, the wrath of Achilles, the death of Hector, the sack of Troy. Part Second is devoted to Homer, to German and English criticism of Homer, and to a discussion of the historic evidences of the Trojan war. The classical scholar will find the book useful and the ordinary reader will find it interesting.

JAPANESE FAIRY WORLD. Stories from the Wonder Love of Japan. By WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS. 8vo., Schenectady: James H. Barhyte.

There seems to be rather a run, as Mr. Tackleton would say, upon Japanese books about this time. These are tales such as are narrated by the professional story-tellers in the Mikado's capital, many of them being fables with beast, bird and fish figuring as moralists. They are not only curious but entertaining, and afford good reading for children, apart from their graver literary interest. The illustrations are from designs by Ozawa Nenkoku, a native artist of Tokio, and are so good that the reader will really wish that there were more of them.

AN AMUSING LETTER.

MR. RUSKIN'S ADVICE TO CHESTERFIELD.

From The London Globe

At the distribution of prizes to the art classes at Chesterfield last night, Lord Edward Cavendish presiding, the secretary read an extraordinary letter from Mr. John Ruskin, in answer to one asking him to come to lecture. It is as follows:

"HARLESDEN, London, Friday.

"MY DEAR SIR: Your letter reaches me here. I have just returned from Venice, where I have ruminated in the pasturages of the home of art; the loveliest and holiest of lovely and holy cities, where the very stones cry out, eloquent in the elegancies of rambles. I could not if I would go to Chesterfield, and I much doubt whether I would go if I could. I do not hire myself out—after the fashion of a brainless, longtongued puppet—for filthy lucats. You, and those who told you to write me, want me, I presume, to come that you may make money for your art class; and if I should get you much money you will then tolerate some good advice from me. No, I will not come.

"I have heard of Chesterfield. Hath it not a steeple-abomination, and is it not the home—if not the cradle—of that arch-abomination-creator, Stephenson? To him are we indebted for the screeching and howling and shrieking fiends fit only for a Pandemonium called locomotives that disfigure the loveliest spots of God's own land.

"I will not come to Chesterfield. Tell your students that art is a holy luxury, and they must pay for it. Tell them to study, to ponder, and to work with a single thought for perfection, observing loving and strict obedience to the monitions of their teacher. Let them learn to do things rightly and humbly, and then, by the conviction that they can never do them as well as they have been done by others, they may be profited.

"My good young people, this is preeminently the foolishest—yes, quite the foolishest—notion that you can get into your empty little egg-shells of heads; that you can be a Titian, or a Raphael, or a Phidias; or that you can write like Seneca. But because you cannot be great, that is no reason why you should not aspire to greatness. In joy, humility and humbleness, work together. Only don't stuff art because it will pay, and do not ask for payment because you study art. Art will make you all wiser and happier, and is worth paying for. If you are in debt—as I suppose you are, or why pester me?—pay off your debts yourselves. If you write to me only that you may get money you are on the foolishest of all errands. Wisdom is more precious than rubies, and is offered to you as a blessing in herself. She is the reward of industry, kindness and modesty. She is the prize of prizes, the strength of your life now, and an earnest of the life that is to come. This advice is better than money, and I give it to you gratis. Ponder it and profit by it. Ever faithfully yours,

"JOHN RUSKIN."

THROWING HIMSELF INTO CONVULSIONS.

From The London Echo.

The above is characteristic of Mr. Ruskin. It is like dozens of other comments from the same source. But has it never occurred to Mr. Ruskin, as it has to us, that such comments are written for sensational purposes? It looks as if Mr. Ruskin is afraid that if he were to speak in reasonable language he would not be listened to, and he therefore throws himself into convulsions and screams to the top of his voice.

THE DREAM OF THE RUSKIN.

From The London Telegraph.

Mr. Ruskin apparently sighs for the good time coming when society shall be leaped in the sublimated essence of refinement, and every dustman study the curves of his shovel. Then will cabmen recite Horace and dairymaids refuse to milk ugly cows. Porters will think more of Plato than of their packages, and market gardeners strive to grow their vegetables of the required tint of sage green. The leaders of society will discard the ordinary dress of an English gentleman for the elegant and artistic negligence of the slouch hat, the velveteen jacket and the aesthetic knickerbockers of Newman-street. To be ill-favored will be a capital offence, the Prime Minister will be chosen for his talent in sketching from nature, and the cleverest sculptor be elected President of the Artistic Republic. Easels, canvases and oil colors will be distributed gratis to deserving families, and materials for china-painting laid on, at the common expense, like water at the main. The excise duties on ugly furniture will be collected by bevies of beautiful maidens, armed with shapely hammers and empowered to destroy all rococo patterns, and every adult citizen be forced, under a severe penalty, to pave the front of his house with Dutch tiles and supply himself with an artistic knocker hammered by hand after a design approved by the Minister of Taste.

A SCANDALOUS HOAX.

To the Editor of The Globe.

SIR: The letter you quote in your last night's issue as having been sent by me to the secretary of the Art School at Chesterfield, is an impudent hoax from beginning to end, and you will oblige me by letting this be known as soon as possible. I am, Sir, your faithful servant, JOHN RUSKIN.

MEMOIR OF GOVERNOR A. DREW.

With Personal Reminiscences. By PELEG W. CHANDLER. With Portrait and Views of his Birthplace and Burial place. 16mo. Cloth. Price $1 25.

The volume includes two literary addresses by Governor Andrew never before printed, and his valedictory address to the Massachusetts Legislature. Says The Boston Daily Advertiser:

"Mr. Chandler has peculiar qualifications for the work undertaken by him, the preparation of a memoir not intended to be elaborate, but appreciative and just. He knew Governor Andrew at the college, and afterward was his warm personal friend during the whole period of his professional and political life in Boston. The memoir gives a clear account of the public life events and features, his career considered with an estimate of his character and public services. The personal reminiscences are more friendly and informal, and present Andrew as he seemed to those who had the privilege of an intimate acquaintance with him."

MINES AND MINING.

MONDAY, Nov. 29—P. M.

Mining stocks to-day generally were in the "dumps," and it was not only the fancies that suffered, but some of the best stocks on the lists showed important declines. There seemed to be no special reason why to-day's market should have been any different from the markets of last week, beyond the fact that dulness was prevalent, and that, therefore, any attempt to sell stocks found no purchasing market. The Comstock and Bodie shares continue to decline, and to-day Consolidated Virginia sold at 2.10, California at 1½ and Bulwer at 1½. The Leadville shares were weak, Chrysolite down to 6⅜ and Iron Silver to 2½@2¾. Moose, with only a small amount of transactions, fell from 1.10 to 92 cents, and such properties as Green Mountain, Rising Sun and Cherokee declined from 15 to 70 cents per share. Copper Knob recovered to 15 cents, Silver Nugget was lower at 30 cents, Great Eastern at 30 cents and Bonanza Chief at 20 cents. The markets closed dull and weak.

(BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.)

LEADVILLE, Nov. 29.—The Dunkin mine has greatly improved, and greater ore bodies are now exposed than ever before. Shipments for November have been 450 tons.

In the Surprise shaft of the Hibernia Consolidation a body of ore six feet in width has been encountered.

Serious trouble is threatened between the Iron Silver and Silver Wave mines in the south working. Both companies have large armed forces, and a conflict is expected to-night.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 29.—The only noticeable feature of the mining stock market is a gradual hardening of Alta, as the outside operators look upon the movement with great suspicion. It is rumored that the manipulators are constant buyers.

E. E. Eyre, an old member of the San Francisco Stock Exchange, left here on Saturday for Southern Arizona, with the intention of investing in mines. It not successful he will extend his trip to New-York to engage in business.

BODIE, Cal., Nov. 23.—The standard mine shipped to the mill during the past week 1,129 tons of ore; average fine assay, $24 10; crude bullion received, 2,385 ounces; shipped to company, $22,463 28. The Spaulding Company have begun sinking ore for milling purposes.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., Nov. 28.—Union Consolidated raised during the past week 227 tons of ore from the 2,400 and 2,500 levels; assays average $28 65. Consolidated Virginia raised 891 tons assaying $20 80, and shipped $68,350 bullion. California raised 603 tons, assaying $23 06. Hale and Norcross raised 48 tons, assaying $58 45, also 11 cars which were not assayed. Sierra Nevada raised 52 tons, assays not given.

Details concerning the death of George P. Robinson, near Leadville, are given in another column of THE TRIBUNE.

Bullion valued at $134,742 26 was received in this city yesterday from the mines.

The announcement of the sudden death of Colonel H. C. Boswell, president of the Green Mountain Gold Mining Company, will be found in another column of to-day's TRIBUNE.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Leadville Consolidated Mining Company, held on November 15, resolutions were adopted authorizing the sale of 40,000 of the 70,000 shares of stock in the treasury at 75 cents per share, to discharge the indebtedness of the company, which then amounted to $29,886 80 and which, being long overdue, required prompt attention. The secretary of the company yesterday issued a circular stating that from the 12th of October to the 1st inst. the mine had produced ore netting $5,232 90, from which the superintendent had paid debts of the company amounting to $3,318 71; and that the superintendent reports four bodies of ore now exposed in the Carbonate mine with encouraging prospects, and that there are hopes that before these are exhausted sufficient ore will be extracted to at least liquidate the indebtedness. The Board of Trustees have, however, deemed it best not to rely entirely on this prospect, and have decided to provide funds by the sale of treasury stock as originally proposed, and if the proceeds are not needed for the payment of the debts, to allow the money to remain in the treasury subject to the disposition of the Board.

The secretary of the Red Elephant Company has just returned to the city from a visit to the mine, and reports that between 75 and 100 men are now at work. Charles R. Fish, president of the Clear Creek County Bank of Georgetown, an old and experienced miner, and one of the largest stockholders in the company, is the managing director, and will have entire charge of the workings of the property. It is now believed that with only one-half the former expense the production can be greatly increased. A large amount of ground is to be developed, and the work of running levels and sinking tunnels is being prosecuted day and night. The property has heretofore been worked through four different openings, but the intention is to have it worked through the main shaft while the connections are being made and until further operations are fully decided upon.

"EMPRESS MINING CO. OF COLORADO"
Hereby invite tenders for 10,000 shares of its treasury stock, in any part thereof, more or less (or the whole offer), for the purpose of further developing the mine. The par value of stock is $5 per share, unassessable. The property is on Mammoth Hill, Gilson County, Colorado, about 300 feet below the well-known "Bottom" vein, and is 150 feet on a line for nine the company holds United States letters patent. The main shaft is now sunk 60 feet, vertically, in which one vein has been cut 3 feet in width, and which has a very rich copper lode, and the 2d lode has been in low grade silver sulphides with copper iron—a sure indication of rich ore in close proximity. It is a fact that mines in this section that show rich ore top have always proved rich when sunk deep enough, and it is for the purpose of sinking to a depth of 300 feet that the company now offer this stock. Having entire confidence in the property, I feel bound to inform the public that if the mine that property will be found before that depth is reached.

During the past week the company has bought and shipped from the Ladderwood Mfg. Co., 96 Liberty-st., New-York, steam-hoisting machinery, in order that the work of sinking may be carried on as fast as possible. Further information, if wanted, gladly furnished by any of the trustees.

Tenders for stock will be received until 3 p. m. on Saturday, December 4, the company reserving the right to reject any or all bids. Stock allotted to be paid for on or before January 10, 1881. All proposals to be addressed to
