HOW OLD IS CIVILIZATION?

THE ORIGIN OF NATIONS. In Two Parts: On Early Civilizations; on Ethnic Affinities, etc. By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M. A., Camden Professor of Ancient History, Oxford, and Canon of Canterbury. 16mo, pp. 281. Charles Scribner's Sons.

The purpose of Canon Rawlinson's little book is to show that civilization is not as old as most modern writers are disposed to assume, and to repel attacks upon the credibility of the Bible based upon the supposed existence of civilization at an earlier date than can be reconciled with Scriptural chronology. His manner of treating the subject is eminently fair and candid, and readers whose minds are fully committed to the current idea of the great antiquity of civilization cannot fail to be impressed with what he says. Taking up one after the other the civilizations of Egypt, Babylon, Phœnicia, Asia Minor, Central Asia, China and Etruria, and giving to each a lucid, compact chapter, he finds as the result of his inquiry that so far as civilization can be traced back historically, there is only one country where the critical judgment of the present day is in suspense. That is Egypt. The many myriads of years postulated for their past history by the Babylonians and Assyrians, the Hindoos, the Chinese and others have been shown to be pure fiction. Cuneiform scholars place the beginning of Babylon about B.C. 2300, of Assyria about B.C. 1500. The best Aryan scholars place the dawn of Iranic civilization about B.C. 1500, and of India about B.C. 1200. Chinese investigators can find nothing solid or substantial in the past of the "Celestials" earlier at the furthest than B.C. 1154. For Phœnicia the date assigned by the latest English investigator, Kendrick, is the sixteenth or seventeenth century before Christ. Dr. Schliemann's investigations in the Troad show the existence of a low type of civilization in that region, which may reach back to B.C. 2000. In the rest of Asia Minor we have no certain knowledge of any civilization that has a greater antiquity than about B.C. 900. In Europe the incipient civilization delineated by Homer must have existed before his time, and may have commenced as early as the Trojan epoch, which is probably about B.C. 1200. No other European civilization can compete with this, the Etruscan not reaching back further than about B.C. 700. It seems, therefore, that a general agreement of scholars and investigators limits the past history of civilized man to a date removed from our own time by less than 4,400 years, except in a single instance. There are writers of high repute who place the dawn of Egyptian civilization at about B.C. 2700, or only four centuries before that of Babylon, while there are others who claim for it an antiquity exceeding this by above 2,400 years. Mariette and Lenormant give the date of Menes, the first Egyptian king in Manetho's list, at B.C. 5004; Bragsch at 4400, Lepsius at 3892, Bunsen at 3059, Stuart Poole at 2717, and G. Wilkinson at 2691. All these authorities reason from the same data—the monuments, the Manetho chronology and the Turin papyrus, and they reach their varying conclusions by disagreements on the important point of whether the dynasties of kings recorded were all successive and continuous, or whether some were contemporaneous. Thus Mariette denies that any two of Manetho's thirty-one dynasties were contemporaneous, while Brugsch makes the ninth and tenth contemporary with the eighth and eleventh, and groups several others together in like manner. Bunsen and others carry this principle still further.

Canon Rawlinson argues, and it must be admitted that there is a great deal of force in his position, that the long chronology hypothesis is highly improbable. It is unreasonable, he maintains, to suppose one section of mankind to have stood for above two thousand years on a totally different level from all other sections—to suppose that settled government, law, order, high morality, art, science of a certain kind, existed for two thousand years in the valley of the Nile without spreading to other nations. Egypt was not a sequestered island or a remote corner of the earth, but a veritable highway of nations—a territory standing in the closest connection with the fairest portions of the eastern world. Much more probable is it to conclude, thinks Rawlinson, that civilization took its rise in Egypt a short time only before the period when all agree it first began in Babylon and Phœnicia, and that its progress was upon the whole equable, uniform and natural, the earth presenting at no time the spectacle of one highly civilized nation standing alone for thousands of years in the midst of rude and unpolished races.

The answer which will be made to this line of argument by those who believe in the great antiquity of the human race is that in civilization as in other things it is the first steps which cost, and that back of the time when Egypt possessed a cultured population capable of rearing her great temples and pyramids must have been a very long period when her people were slowly emerging out of barbarism. Canon Rawlinson anticipates this objection by frankly disputing in the introduction to his book the assumption that primeval man was a savage. The primitive race of men he supposes to have been substantially civilized, possessing language, thought and intelligence, conscious of a Divine Being, quick to form the conception of tools and to frame them as it needed them, early developing many of the useful arts, and only sinking by degrees and under peculiar circumstances into the savage condition.

THE INDIAN TRAGEDY.

SHADOWS OF SHASTA. By JOAQUIN MILLER. 16mo. pp. 184. Jansen, McClurg & Co.

This sketch has been thrown into the form of a story, and yet it is not really a work of fiction. It is a highly dramatic and impressive exposure of the hideous outrages perpetrated by the United States Government upon the Western Indians,—an exposure even more effective perhaps than the recent publication by "H. H.," under the title of "A Century of Dishonor." Mr. Miller gives in his introduction his reason for writing the book: "Because last year in the heart of the Sierras I saw women and children chained together and marched down from their cool, healthy homes to degradation and death on the Reservation. At the side of this long chained line, urged on and kept in order by bayonets, rode a young officer, splendid in gold and brass, and newly burnished, from that now famous charity school on the Hudson. These women and children were guilty of no crime; they were not even accused of wrong. But their fathers and brothers lay dead in battle-harness on the mountain heights and in the lava-beds; and these few silent survivors, like Israel of old, were being led into captivity—but, unlike the chosen children, never to return to the beloved heart of their mountains." The "Shadows of Shasta" derives an exceptional impressiveness, first from the fervor and sincerity of the author: "It is impossible," he says, "to write with composure or evenness on this subject; one wants to rise up and crush things"; and next, from the art, perhaps unconscious, with which Mr. Miller has thrown into the foreground the consideration not so much of the sufferings of the Indians as the ineffable disgrace of a Government which makes its army an instrument for oppressing and pillaging the weak and a tool of pimps and thieves.

I.
TURKISH LIFE IN WAR TIME.
By HENRY O. DWIGHT.
1 vol., 12mo, $1 50.
"Turkish Life in War Time" is a book of most unusual interest, hardly surpassed in variety of Turkish life and character, and unique in presenting the Russo-Turkish struggle as viewed from Constantinople. Mr. Dwight, an American long resident there, enjoyed exceptional facilities for studying the Turkish view of affairs. His book is, however, concerned with the people rather than with the military and political warfare. It describes, in the most graphic way, the life of the refugees and the story day by day given by the Turkish capital, from the time of the Bulgarian insurrection and its suppression to the close of the Russo-Turkish war.

II.
KNIGHTS OF TO-DAY:
OR, LOVE AND SCIENCE.
By CHARLES BARNARD.
1 vol., 12mo, $1.
Mr. Barnard's stories are in a new field of romance in which courage and quickness of resource work through the most modern weapons, and the quick witted American knight of to-day has taken up the new armor of the new times—the steam engine, the telegraph, photographic camera and written red tape and care for love and duty. The volume includes the already celebrated "telegraph story." It is not overrating a multitude of readers for everything that Mr. Barnard has written in the magazines.

MINES AND MINING.

THURSDAY, April 21—P. M.

The mining stock markets were hardly so active as yesterday, and in several instances the advances then made were not sustained. Among these exceptions the Mariposa stocks were prominent by their great strength. They were comparatively active, too, and rose, Common to 8⅝ from 7¼ yesterday, and preferred from 9 to 10. Hibernia was specially active and strong, and with the bulk of the business at 1.50 it closed firm but unchanged at 1.45. Amie was dull, but 3 cents higher at 53, and Little Chief was also quiet but firm at about 1.30. Hobill was inactive but steady at 1.15. Stormont rose from 3.40 to 3.75, closing strong at the advance. Bull Domingo lost yesterday's advance, and ended 10 cents lower at 2.75. Leadville Consolidated fell 5 cents to 2. Big Pittsburg was unable to support its recent advance, and dropping to 3.75 closed 40 cents lower at 4.10. A large business was done in Red Elephant, which declined from 32 to 28 cents, but afterward recovered to 30 cents, against 31 cents yesterday. The Comstock shares were lower in response to news of a decline in the San Francisco market. Consolidated Virginia fell from 2.60 to 2.40, and California was 5 cents lower at 1.50; both closed weak at the lowest figures for the day. Chollar was 1 cent lower at 70 cents. Caledonia was fairly steady at 24@25 cents. Moose was active and firm at 1.55. Although there was not much business in Silver Cliff it sold at 6⅝ and closed at 6½, against 6⅛ yesterday. Mineral Creek further advanced to 1.25.
