LITERARY NOTES.

Mr. O. B. Frothingham, it is said, will make his home in Boston and devote himself to literary pursuits. He is engaged upon a life of the late George Ripley.

Henri Rochefort's newspaper, the Intransigeant, has not flourished. It is not paying expenses, and will be transformed into a journal of small size, selling for one cent

The author of the No Name novel "Baby Rue" is at work upon a new story to be called "A Modern Hagar," which will be published in the same series and is, in part, a continuation of the first-named story.

Can it be that the world is indebted to the brusque hero Oliver Cromwell for the ballad of "Mother Goose"? Griffiths & Farran, whose house first published it, have promised, so The Liverpool Mercury says, to prove that Cromwell was really the author.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have in press a translation of a German monograph on "Louise, Queen of Prussia." It is doubtless an effort to celebrate her womanly heroism and beauty as worthily in words as such artists as Rauch and Richter have done in marble and on canvas. Queen Louise was the mother of Emperor William.

"Souvenirs de Amerique" is the title of the volume which Marie Colombier, the "leading lady" in Sarah Bernhardt's American company, has just published in Paris. It is written in a spirit unfriendly to Mlle. Bernhardt, and the not to be trusted gossips aver that the gifted Doña Sol is dictating a book in self-defence.

A curiosity in the shape of an "Infinitesimo edition of the Revised New Testament" has been published by Legge Brothers & Co. It is a complete reproduction in miniature of the Oxford edition; the type-work on each page measuring 1 by 1¾ inches. The book contains 446 pages, and a single sheet of superfine paper 24 by 38 inches is enough for a single copy.

The new firm of White & Stokes, the members of which were formerly with Dodd, Mead & Co., have made their first announcements of books, which will include, for October, a novel by Mr. W. O. Stoddard, entitled "Esau Hardery," the here of which is a tramp; "The Christmas Owl, Watching for Santa Claus," by Mrs. Martha J. Lamb, a holiday book of original and selected poetry relating to Christmas time; and a prize painting book "Good Times," by Miss Dora Wheeler. On alternate pages will be designs in colors, and on opposite pages the same designs in outline, which young artists may fill in with water colors.

An account of the matrimonial alliances by which the First Napoleon hoped to found and consolidate an empire as large as that of Charlemagne, The Manchester Guardian learns, will be published soon by Longman & Co. The author is the Hon. Captain Bingham, who has been able to make special investigations for the purposes of this work. Mr. Bingham will show how Napoleon gratified his mania for match-making, not only in his own family circle, but also by making alliances for his marshals, as Berthier and Davoust, and even for diplomatists like Talleyrand. He holds that "there was a marriage scheme mixed up with almost all the important events of the empire, with the fatal march to Moscow as well as with the rash and iniquitous invasion of Spain."

An irate Scot has replied to Miss Braddon's defence of her penny edition of Scott's novels as follows: "Her statement that Scott's dialogue is so full of Scotticisms that it cannot be understood south of the Tweed is entirely erroneous, and in her penny numbers there is just as much of the Scotch dialect as, relatively to size, exists in the novels. But is not Miss Braddon, in objecting to Scott's Scotch, simply speaking beside the mark? Who objects to the Scotch in 'Rob Roy,' for example? Would 'Rob Roy' Anglicized please Miss Braddon or please anybody else? Again, is 'The Fair Maid of Perth' to be denuded of its Scotch dialect to suit Miss Braddon's views? If so, I make bold to say that, whatever Englishmen may think of Miss Braddon's ideas, Scotchmen can only have one opinion—namely, that the editress has a 'gude conceit' of herself and entire want of appreciation of Scott."
