found itself confronted about two years ago with the necessity, in order to protect the interests of its shareholders, of effecting a compromise with its great rival, the American Union Company. The capital stock of the Western Union Company had been gradually increased to $41,000,000. The methods pursued by the company in increasing its stock had always been admitted to have been proper and legal. Since the time when the capital stock of the company was last fixed the surplus earnings amounted to about $15,000,000. When the consolidation of the three telegraph companies was agreed to, the property of the Western Union Company was therefore worth $15,000,000 more than the par value of its capital stock. It would not have been fair or equitable to have paid for the properties of the American Union and the Atlantic and Pacific Companies in the stock of the Western Union Company without making some provision by which all the surplus earnings of the Western Union Company should be secured to its shareholders. If the surplus earnings had been invested by the company in interest-bearing securities, no one could have questioned for a moment the right of the company to do this. If the surplus earnings had been distributed among the shareholders in a cash dividend, the right of the company to take this action could also not have been called in question. But if the best use for the interests of the shareholders of the surplus earnings was to make them a basis for increasing the capital stock, it was difficult to understand why the company was not authorized to make this most beneficial use of its surplus property. The company had an unquestioned right to increase its capital stock to any amount. The overwhelming majority of the shareholders preferred to receive their share of the surplus earnings in stock instead of money or other securities. But when the plan was about to be carried into effect a stockholder stepped in to prevent it, without any other conceivable motive than the love of contest. As the plaintiff's interests in the company were not prejudiced by the consolidation agreement, perhaps he was induced to take the step which he had taken from a regard for the public interests. It would be impossible to find any public interests which could be served by preventing the shareholders of the company from receiving a stock instead of a cash dividend. As a matter of fact the stock dividend was the most valuable dividend to the shareholders which could have been declared by the company. The statute which provided that dividends should only be made from actual surplus profits was intended to protect creditors. The statute was not intended as a weapon to enable one single shareholder to annoy and injure all the rest of his fellow-stockholders without in the least degree protecting or furthering his own interests as a stockholder. In the present case the issuing and distributing of the stock dividend had been accomplished, and the only question remaining was whether or not a single stockholder can come forward and insist in the interest of the public that what has been done with the consent of all but him must be undone. Mr. Evarts declared that in his opinion the stock had been legally issued and that no one could undo what had been legally done. Decision was reserved.

CIVIL NOTES.

Antal Zambori obtained an order in the Superior Court yesterday appointing a guardian ad litem to begin a suit to have his marriage with Susannah Seaman declared null and void on the ground that he was induced to enter into it by fraud and duress. Antal says he is only sixteen years old and that he does not want to be married at all, and especially to the proposed defendant in the suit.

In the Court of Common Pleas, Special Term, yesterday, Judge Van Brunt denied a motion made by the Manhattan Railway Company to have certain parts of the complaint in the suit brought against it by the Metropolitan Company to have the amended leases declared illegal and void stricken out as irrelevant, redundant and scandalous. The parts of the complaint objected to contain charges of fraud and collusion on the part of the directors of the company in making the leases.

The application recently made in behalf of May Irene Hoyt to compel Drs. Talcott, Millard and Dillon to file the certificates made by them in regard to her mental condition upon which she was committed last summer to the Friends' Asylum, near Philadelphia, was withdrawn yesterday. Ex-Judge Shipman appeared for Miss Hoyt, and said to Judge Truax, before whom the matter came, that the certificates had been approved, not in the Superior, but in the Supreme, Court. Judge Truax imposed $10 costs on the moving party.
