LITERARY NOTES.

Dr. Marvin R. Vincent's little volume of travel, "In the Shadow of the Pyrenees," is to be brought out immediately and in charming shape by Charles Scribner's Sons. It is daintily printed and is illustrated by etchings of unusual excellence.

A new department with the neat title of "Open Letters" is to be added to The Century. It will contain short and lively essays on all manner of subjects each of them to be signed by the writer.

Dr. David Pryde, lecturer on English literature in the Edinburgh School of Arts, is the author of a little volume on the matter and manner of reading which has just been published by Funk & Wagnalls under the title of "The Highways of Literature." Dr. Pryde's tone is sometimes ludicrously pedagogical, his style is absurd, and his criticisms are commonplace; but his advice to the young reader is, as far as it goes, reasonable and judicious.

Drake's Traveler's Magazine is chiefly valuable in giving a good deal of railway and local information eminently useful to travellers and not always easily attainable. It includes compact guides to New-York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Cleveland.

In the April number of The Bibliographer Mr. Cornelius Walford describes a plan for making what has been "a dream of his life"—a dictionary of English periodical literature. His study of the subject has disclosed the fact that about thirty thousand periodical publications have come upon the scene and passed away. As for those now in existence, it will take a long line of figures to number them. Mr. Walford's plan has a wide scope, and includes all the oddities of ephemeral publications. "Only recently," he says, "I found there were as many as sixty publications, past and present, issued in connection with public schools—that is, written and edited by the scholars. Then there are missionary journals printed (in English) and published periodically at stations in the centre of Africa and elsewhere. There are journals printed on board ship during several of the Arctic explorations. I think I have a note of a newspaper printed in a balloon! Many newspapers have been printed in the camps of marching armies. All great events call into being a special literature. During the Tichborne trial there were several; during the Bravo investigation the like; I have not heard of any resulting from the more recent Belt trial. All these claim to be noticed in due order."

Zola's "Bonheur des Dames," a translation of which has just been published here by Peterson, is a vulgar mass of detail suited only to the comprehension of the most sordid and uneducated type of shop-girl. If to be at once stupid and nasty is to be "real," M. Zola has reached the highest place in "realism." It is extraordinary that any critic can consider such stuff worthy of serious review.

Alexander Williams, the veteran Boston publisher and bookseller, has retired from business and will be succeeded by his young partners under the firm name of Cupples, Upham & Co. Mr. Williams has had a long and honorable career as one of the largest booksellers in New-England.

Dr. John Hall has written a preface for a new edition of Professor Killen's history of "The Ancient Church," which will shortly be published by A. D. F. Randolph & Co.

In her new story just begun in Harper's Weekly Miss Matilda Barbara Betham-Edwards introduces a quaint and lively little old lady who finds a malicious amusement in promoting the quarrels of an impetuous young pair, her protégés. The story will turn upon the progress and results of their antagonism, and the pleasant end is not hard to foresee. One of the cleverest of the minor English novels of the past twenty-five years is Miss Edwards's "Kitty"—a book remarkable for its display of shrewd perception of character. Miss Edwards's first work was published when she was only nineteen—she is now forty-seven. She is a cousin of Miss Amelia B. Edwards.

Charles Scribner's Sons will publish this week "A Critique of Design—Arguments," a volume in which Professor L. E. Hicks has undertaken to review, examine and label the methods of reasoning in natural theology. He is said to present an acute discrimination of the argument from order and the argument from end.

The offer of the Harpers to young American artists has created a pleasant stir among the knights of brush and pencil. Nearly eleven hundred applications for Domett's Hymn have been made already by young aspirants for the prize. New-York stands first in the number of applications, then come Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and Cincinnati, in the order named. A few have come from the South, chiefly from New-Orleans and Charleston, S. C.

The flippant, shallow and spasmodic lectures on American humorists delivered in London two years ago by the Rev. H. R. Haweis have been reprinted here by Funk & Wagnalls. Two editions have been brought out, one in boards and one in paper covers.
