THE COURTS.

THE STAR ROUTE TRIAL.

MR. INGERSOLL'S ADDRESS FOR THE DEFENCE CONTINUED.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Before proceedings were begun in the Star Route trial to-day, Mr. Wilson said he had been informed indirectly that his client, ex-Senator Kellogg, would be required to appear to-morrow to answer the charge of misdemeanor against him. As Mr. Kellogg was in New-Orleans, it was unjust to require his attendance under such short notice. After some discussion the Court said it would answer if Kellogg appeared on June 18, the first day of the next term.

Mr. Ingersoll resumed his address with a bitter assault upon Moore's evidence. He said that evidence had all been purchased, all bargained for in the open shambles. That system was dangerous in any country where the Government advertised for testimony. When they advertise for a villain they get him. That was what they got from the informer system—an infamous system. A court was the holiest place on earth, and the informer system turned it into a dark, unwholesome dungeon, a cavern, a den of wild beasts, where crawled the slimy serpents—informers. It brought forth spies to watch the counsel and jury. A juror could not leave his house without the shadow of a spy falling upon his doorstep. He had an absolute contempt for any Government that called for informers and spies. Every trial should be in the free air. These slimy things that crawled in the dark he abhorred. When Moore returned from the West he had the claws of his avarice in the persons of a United States Senator and an Assistant Postmaster-General; yet he sold out for $627. Did the jury believe that? It was incredible. That was an eternal end of that man's testimony. He would call him buried; put sod over the place and raise a stone to the memory of A. W. Moore, bearing the initials "R. I. P." If the Government wished to dig up the corpse, they were welcome.

Turning to Rerdell, Mr. Ingersoll said that he would not apply epithets to him. Epithets would glance from his reputation as birdshot from the turret of a monitor. The worst thing he could say about him was to call him Mr. Rerdell. The worst thing said after that would have the taint of flattery. He had always been treated like a friend by Dorsey; had eaten his bread for years. He found no page blotted with an unjust act to charge against Dorsey; had no complaint. Under those circumstances, he went to Clayton—Dorsey's enemy—and made charges against him. He regarded it as a virtuous action. Virtue should be rewarded, so in return he wanted his steamboat routes, the Jennings claim, and what each asked if he wished anything else, the disinterested patriot further said that he wanted a clerkship for his father-in-law. His letter indicated that he also wanted a clerkship for himself. Yet at that time, according to his own testimony, he did not believe that Dorsey had ever done anything wrong; but he was willing to sell him to the Government. He turned out affidavits day and night. He said he wanted to save Dorsey, yet offered to bring the books from New-York, offered to bring further evidence against him.

Mr. Ingersoll turned his attention to Rerdell's telegram to Dorsey from Jersey City. He read, "Up to this moment I have been faithful to every trust." In comparison with that check, brass was a liquid. "The affidavit story is a lie." That was technically true. Nothing pleased a man so much as to be able to work a hair of truth into the mortar of his lie. It was delightful to smell the perfume of a fact in the hellbrath of his perjury. He would not convict the meanest, lowest wretch that ever crawled between heaven and earth on such testimony.

The foreman of the jury, who had been examining the telegram, remarked upon the differences in the handwriting. Mr. Ingersoll pointed out that it was in three different styles, evidently written at different times. "The fact is," said Mr. Ingersoll, striking the table with his fist, "that the papers had been manufactured. When the Government said: 'It is not enough,' these papers had been manufactured." Rerdell crossed himself at every turn. He had sworn that Torrey had bought him the books, and that he carried off the journal. Later on he would know why he did not take the ledger. Rerdell had his philosophy. He swore that he had a conversation with Torrey, because he knew that Torrey was away out on the bosom of the Atlantic. But the defence had telegraphed Torrey and he had come back in time to contradict Rerdell. Now, why had Rerdell sworn that he did not take the ledger? There was more in that short story than people imagined. He had a shirt folded up in a paper. Then he put James, to assist him, in the package was too small for two books, so he said he had carried the journal. He told James that he was afraid to show it because a fellow was looking. So the sort, in conscious innocence, reposed unseen. If Rerdell had only said that he put the book in his carpet-sack, it could never have been disproved. But he said that he carried it under his arm, and Chase Andrews swore that he rode with him in the next seat of the Pullman car, and that he did not have it. With keen irony Mr. Ingersoll continued his review of Rerdell's testimony. The jury had seen him sitting here from day to day with beaming face listening to Messrs. Ker and Bliss, when they were trying to show what a grand rascal he was. But he slunk away, covered with the shame of innocence when Mr. Wilson attempted to show him that his plea of guilty was false. He wished it understood that he was guilty, and it was the proudest moment of his life.

MR. HUNTINGTON'S EXAMINATION ENDED.

The examination of C. P. Huntington, one of the defendants in the suit brought in the Supreme Court by David Stewart to recover $76,000, with interest since 1879, on certain transaction in Central Pacific Railway stock, was concluded yesterday. After a short redirect examination by Mr. Bangs, Mr. Huntington was cross-examined further by Mr. Choate in regard to his connection with the Contract and Finance Company and certain other matters. Mr. Huntington had said that his former partner, Mark Hopkins, had not had any written or verbal authority from him to sign a certain note.

Mr. Choate—You say Mr. Hopkins acted for you in all your business matters in California; do you still say he had no authority to sign this note?

Mr. Huntington—He could have had no authority in this particular transaction, as I did not know of it until afterward.

Mr. Choate—Will you say, then, that he signed your name to the note without authority?

Mr. Huntington—Mr. Hopkins had authority to do pretty much everything for me. No matter what work Hopkins did for me, if he had said it was all right I would not have questioned it.

After the examination of Mr. Huntington was concluded, Mr. Bangs offered in evidence the articles of association of the Contract and Finance Company. He turned so as to face the jury and began to read the document, when he was interrupted by a deep, hollow voice proceeding from the breast of his junior associate, Mr. Conkling, to the effect that it would be a wiser course to pursue first to read the date of the instrument. Mr. Bangs yielded assent to the suggestion, and having read the date, was proceeding to read again from the beginning, when the same deep voice inquired, "What date, please?" The desired information was given, and Mr. Bangs continued to read without interruption for a few minutes, when he was startled by two hands laid gently on his shoulders from behind, and by a head which bent down from its lofty eighborhood on the shoulders of Mr. Conkling to whisper something in his ear. The whispered something remained a secret between Mr. Bangs and Mr. Conkling, but its effect was seen in the fact that Mr. Bangs turned partly round, so that he faced a little more toward Justice Barrett while he continued to read. Owing to the absence of a witness the trial was adjourned at an early hour until to-day.

COSTS FOR THE HARLEM IMPROVEMENT.

An opinion was rendered by Justice Barrett at Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on the question of the taxation of the costs in the proceedings for the improvement of the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, which as presented amounted to $111,000. S. E. Lyon claimed $15,000 for his legal services in behalf of the Federal Government and Thomas L. Ogden $5,000 for his services as counsel to the Commissioners appointed under the act. Justice Barrett says that the attorneys have doubtless performed valuable services, but under the language of the act he does not think that those services should be charged upon the property-owners, but they should be paid by those who employed them. The Commissioners under the act were General W. F. Smith, president; James D. Fish and ex-Mayor William R. Grace. The president claimed $15,000 as fees and the other Commissioners $10,000 each. The Judge holds that the points with regard to the legality of the Commissioners' fees are not well taken. The office of Commissioner was not incompatible with that of Mayor of the city. As to the measure of compensation, that should be governed by the value of the services. The Judge adds: "I am by no means prepared, however, by the meagre and conflicting evidence now before the Court, to allow the large sums which they claim." He therefore sends the matter to ex-Judge William Mitchell as referee to determine the amounts the Commissioners should receive, and also several other matters included in the bill of costs.

A BREACH OF PROMISE SUIT AT NEWARK.

Bertha Driedorff, who lives in New-York, brought suit against Peter Snyder, of Livingstone, near Newark, for breach of promise of marriage, and the case was tried yesterday by Sheriff Wright and a jury at Newark. The plaintiff testified that she visited the town of Livingstone, and, while there, got acquainted with Snyder, who asked her to marry him, and fitted a betrothal ring on her finger. The marriage was arranged to take place within a month, and she returned to New-York to prepare for it. When she went again to Livingstone she found that Snyder had married another woman shortly after he made the proposal to herself. The defendant did not appear, and the jury awarded the woman a verdict of $1,200.

AMOUNT OF SAMUEL WOOD'S ESTATE.

An application was made to the Surrogate in October by some of the legatees of the late Samuel Wood for an order removing Dr. Elmer as one of the executors. Thomas Harland was appointed referee to take testimony and recently made a report recommending the removal of Dr. Elmer, on the ground that he was not a fit person, either from lack of honesty or understanding, to perform the duties of his office. A motion was argued yesterday before the Surrogate to have the matter sent back to the referee to take further testimony. The motion was supported by Edwards Pierrepont as counsel for the trustees of the College of Music, an institution for the establishment of which Mr. Wood bequeathed the bulk of the estate. An affidavit of Dr. Elmer was read. He denies the allegation that he had charged the estate $1,160 for expenses in procuring acts incorporating the College of Music when he had in fact paid out only $300. He had spent all the money which had come into his hands honestly and according to the wishes of the testator. He declares that he has incurred the enmity of his co-executors, Alfred L. Simmonsen and Martin Wood, and that in his belief the proceedings for his removal had been instituted by them in fact, and not by the legatees. He asserts that the late Henry G. Stebbins received some of the money which was spent in getting the College of Music incorporated. Mr. Pierrepont also read affidavits of the trustees of the College of Music, who say they wish Dr. Elmer to be continued in his office as executor. He asked the Surrogate not to permit a man of such high reputation as Dr. Elmer to be removed from an office of trust without a full and fair hearing.

Judge Armstrong appeared for the legatees and opposed the motion to send the case back to the referee. He said that Dr. Elmer's reply to the charges against him was that of a man caught appropriating money given him in trust for another purpose. The attempt was now made to cloak Dr. Elmer's conduct with the respectability of those who were associated with him. Much boasting had been indulged in in regard to the extent of Mr. Wood's estate. When Mr. Wood died, unpaid taxes on his estate amounted to $75,000, and his unsecured debts amounted to $200,000. The estate was not worth more than $850,000 at the death of Mr. Wood, and was now not worth more than $300,000.

Mr. Pierrepont replied that he had a sworn inventory according to which the estate was worth more than $1,000,000. Surrogate Rollins here interposed and said that he could not allow the counsel to drift any further from the point. He would give his decision in a few days.

THE WANDELL DIVORCE SUIT.

The trial of the suit brought recently in the Superior Court by Charlotte M. Wandell against her husband, Francis M. Wandell, for a limited divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, was begun yesterday before Judge O'Gorman, sitting at Special Term. Mrs. Wandell was the first witness. She is apparently about twenty-three years old and is comely, with bright eyes, regular features and fresh, rosy cheeks. She was dressed quietly, although a cluster of artificial roses adorned her bonnet and a large bunch of violets ornamented her corsage. She gave her testimony modestly, but often with much feeling. Mr. and Mrs. Wandell were married in 1877. Mrs. Wandell, it is said, did not find favor with the parents of her husband, and they refused to recognize her. Mr. Wandell after a short time allowed himself to be influenced more by his filial than his conjugal love, and went to live with his parents, not neglecting, however, before leaving her, to treat her with cruelty.

Mrs. Wandell testified that she was sixteen years old when she was married. She lived happily with her husband at first. One night in October last Mr. Wandell came home and told her that he would be in a better situation if he had a mistress instead of a wife. A short time after the birth of her first child, Mr. Wandell struck her on the side of her face with his fist and with such violence that her earring was broken. After this time he neglected her constantly, and carried his neglect to such an extent as not to speak to her for days or even to come near her. He gave her twenty-five or thirty cents a day to meet the household expenses. At last she could not stand his cruel neglect any longer and left him. She went to visit her sister in Chicago, whence she wrote to her husband, telling him that all she asked was his love and that having this she could live happily in a tenement-house. When she came back from Chicago she went to the house of Mrs. William R. Wilcox, where after a partial reconciliation one day with her husband she was told by him on the next that he would never live with her again, as his father had threatened to disown him if he did so.

The trial will be continued to-day.

AN OLD CASE REVIVED.

Francis Saltus died many years ago, leaving a large estate. After his death a complicated and apparently endless litigation sprang up. The oldest employes in the Surrogate's office cannot remember the time when some proceeding in regard to the estate was not pending in that court. With the lapse of time, death, failure in business and other casualties have swept away a long list of successive executors. About two or three years ago E. W. Gebhard began some proceeding against the then executor to compel him to make an accounting. Mr. Gebhard yesterday moved before Surrogate Rollins for an allowance out of the estate on account of his services in this proceeding. The motion was opposed by several attorneys and Surrogate Rollins denied it. One attorney said that he represented persons interested in the estate for thirty years, but he had never asked for an allowance. It is said that most of the lawyers in the city first and last have had something to do with litigation affecting the estate.

CIVIL NOTES.

Judge O'Gorman yesterday, in the Superior Court, Chambers, denied the motion to vacate the order of arrest granted against Perrin H. Sumner in a suit brought by Daniel M. Davidson to recover damages for loss alleged to have been sustained by reason of the fraudulent representations of Mr. Sumner.

There are five vacant city lots, each twenty-five feet in width, in One-hundred-and-seventeenth-st., near First-ave., to which Lambert Suydam has held a perfect paper title for years. He regularly has paid the taxes and assessments, but otherwise has had nothing to do with the land. James Wood, who owns adjoining property, has been making use of the Suydam land for many years by building a small barn upon it. Mr. Suydam claimed ownership under his undisturbed possession and "squatter possession." Judge McAdam yesterday decided that Mr. Wood must give the possession of the property to Mr. Suydam.

RETIREMENT OF FREDERICK KRUTINA.

The announcement that Frederick Krutina, the well-known furniture manufacturer and dealer, is about to retire from business, will be received with regret by the many persons to whom the merit of his work is familiar. For more than thirty years Mr. Krutina has been identified with the mercantile interests of this city. His career has been an eminently successful one. He was born at Baden, Germany. At the age of twenty-four he came to this country, and found employment as a wood carver. In a few years he had acquired sufficient capital to begin the manufacture of furniture. His business gradually increased until he became one of the leading manufacturers of the city. At the time of the war he furnished nearly all the large steamers plying along the Atlantic coast. He made hotel furniture one of his specialties. Several of the best known hotels in the South were furnished by him, including the Ballard at Richmond, the National at Norfolk, the Kimball at Atlanta and the Arlington at Washington.

In speaking of the above hotels to a TRIBUNE reporter Mr. Krutina said: "When I received the $30,000 contract for the furniture for the Ballard House, it was accompanied by the request that it should be sent as soon as possible. Such were my facilities that I was able to fill the order within two weeks. The furniture for the Kimball House, at Atlanta, cost $75,000.

"There have been many changes in the styles and materials used in our business during my connection with the trade. In 1860 mahogany and rosewood were dropped from the list of popular woods. Walnut and cherry followed, and finally oak. Now the wheel of fashion has turned and the old woods, mahogany and rosewood, are coming into use again. The most fashionable furniture of to-day is made after the style of the Italian Renaissance. The manufacturers are introducing a high grade of carved work. Formerly the best carvers were imported from Germany and France. Now there are plenty of skilful wood-workers here, who have been trained up in the business. It costs about three times as much now to furnish a house as it cost thirty years ago. This is owing to the higher prices of the woods and labor."

The reporter was then taken through the large establishment of Mr. Krutina, in Houston-st. The first floor is devoted to sideboards and chairs. One of the finest specimens of the former was made of rosewood. The columns in front were of twisted wood, and the niches above them were surrounded with elaborate carvings. The panels were of Venetian plate-glass mirrors. Beside this stood another sideboard in oak, ornamented with marquetry and inlaid brass figures. The second floor contained parlor suits in great variety. There were suits in silk and mohair, suits in Persian and Turkish rugs, suits in plushes and tapestries. A splendid cabinet, an excellent specimen of the carver's and decorator's art, occupied a prominent position upon one side of the room. On the second floor were bedroom sets, bookcases in mahogany and rosewood, Turkish chairs and ladies' secretaries.

As Mr. Krutina wishes to devote his attention to his real estate matters he has decided to sell his entire stock at auction, beginning to-day.

THE SUICIDAL MANIA.

TROY, N. Y., May 21.—Elizabeth Eldridge committed suicide yesterday in the Middleboro, Vt., Jail, in which she was imprisoned for theft. She first attempted to attach a rope to a lead pipe, but it gave way. She then tied a rope made of braided strips torn from a sheet to the bed post and held her body in a sitting position until strangulation ensued.

TRENTON, N. J., May 21.—A dispatch to The Trenton Times from Jamesburg says that Alphonso Linden, an inmate of the Reform School, age seventeen, committed suicide yesterday afternoon. The boy was very refractory and it was found necessary to punish him by incarceration in a cell. When one of the officers of the institution went to the cell on Sunday afternoon he found the boy's corpse suspended by a knotted handkerchief.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 21.—The wife of Johnson Quick, a wealthy farmer, committed suicide by hanging herself yesterday. She was insane.

OSWEGO, N. Y., May 21.—Erwin Sheldon, a storekeeper at Hannibal, Oswego County, committed suicide on Saturday night by hanging himself.

A FULTON MARKET INCIDENT.

Monday is never a very busy day in Fulton Market. The few produces of the land and water that are not disposed of on Saturday are kept over until that time and are then tossed off on an unsuspecting and credulous public. All of the decayed vegetables and unsavory fish having been disposed of at an early hour on Monday morning the marketmen sit down on overturned baskets or pails and exchange bits of gossip while waiting for fresh fish and fresh vegetables. Such was the case yesterday. But there was an unusual amount of whispering and numerous private consultations. The regular customers noticed these peculiar actions of the marketmen, but overlooked them, supposing they were getting up a syndicate to "corner" codfish or "bull" herring. No, they were not attempting either thing. The fact is, there had been an increase in the number of tenants of the market. "How many are there?" asked a scaly-looking fisherman, in high boots, who had just dropped in in time to hear the tail end of the talk. "What's the number of 'em?" said he; "tell me quick, I'm in a hurry."

"Six," replied a bystander, cautiously fondling a carrot.

"What are they?"

"Kittens."

"Where are they?"

"At one of the fish stands."

"Great Scott! What for?"

"For sale as catfish, you old landlubber."

"Wal, by gosh!" and he went out of the market scratching his head.
