MONDAY, Oct. 1—P. M.

When it is stated that the total transactions in stocks to-day amounted only to 158,900 shares, and that a moderate and a conservative estimate attributes one-half of that quantity to the execution of "matched orders," it is told that to-day's stock market was the dullest that has been seen for many months. Beyond that there is little to be added concerning the day's transactions. It, however, must be recorded that this evening's closing prices average higher than Saturday's last figures. It also may be told how, after a remarkably dull opening and a following shrinkage in prices there was a rapid recovery of ½@¾ per cent when it was announced that one more failure had occurred in the clothing trade; and how after that there was another decline on a very dull movement, and how the market suddenly became active in the last ten minutes of business, and prices advanced after a fashion that indicated there never will be a to-morrow for the purchase of stocks. A few stocks are exceptional in not showing gains on Saturday's last figures, and a very few in showing any declines. Among the latter is the stock of Central and Hudson, which, after selling freely in the early dealings at 115@115¾, later dropped to 114½, and closed weak at 115. Probably the opening of the West Shore line to Syracuse, and its large advertising of the fact, which shows a determination to secure a good proportion of the business between New-York and Syracuse, had some effect upon Central and Hudson speculation. The market closed, although at higher figures, not strong.

Government bonds were as dull as usual; bids for the 3s (ex interest) were ¼ higher and for the 4s were ⅛ higher. Annexed are the closing quotations:
