NOTES ON EDUCATION.

The Editor of the Union College Catalogue asks all alumni to inform him of any public positions held by them, political, judicial or military, and also to inform him what literary degrees they are entitled to.

The Hartford, Conn., Free Kindergarten has been very successful during the past year.

There will be a summer school of languages this summer at Amherst College, beginning on July 7, and lasting five weeks. It will be under the direction of Professor William L. Montague. Among the instructors will be Professors Montague and Bernard, in French, Italian and Spanish; Professors Heness and Zuelling, in German; and Professor E. S. Shumway of Rutgers College, in Latin. President Seelye and Professors Crowell and Mather will deliver lectures before the students.

The State Superintendent of Education in Pennsylvania complains of the teachers of the public schools that they "are perpetually changing. Year by year they come and go, and gain only a transient acquaintance as they hurry by. . . . They seem almost as pedagogic tramps, not teachers." The low average salary given to teachers, both male and female, in Pennsylvania, may explain their restlessness. In one county the average for female teachers is $15 97 a month, and in the city of Philadelphia it is $39 75 a month.

Two new buildings for the State University of Indiana are about to be erected and will be finished by the 1st of December next.

The Memphis Appeal says that the crying need of Tennessee is education. "There are not schools enough," it says. "The teachers—taking the State at large—are not accomplished enough; and where schools are opened, the terms are not long enough. Those who have read the educational report of the State, while rejoicing at what is done, cannot but mourn that much greater effort is not made. If ever Tennessee is to stand before the world with the prominence that is its due, it must educate its citizens. What gives Ohio its singular prominence among the States—its natural advantages? No; not as compared with Tennessee; but its public schools, its population of men and women who can read and think. We want more education in Tennessee—education for the laborer as well as for the merchant and the lawyer, education for the negro as well as for the white. If we are to revise our State constitution, let one of the objects be to so mould it as to make education as universal as our youthful population."

President Bascom, of the State University of Wisconsin, which is situated in the city of Madison, says that the students of the University are exposed to many temptations in that city, and he calls upon the civic authorities to do something to make Madison more moral. Many young men, he says, have been ruined during their connection with the University. He calls especially for the enforcement of the law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The Pedagogical Society of St. Louis has adopted strong resolutions in favor of compulsory education, from which the following extract is taken: "Though the States have provided liberally for the maintenance of public schools that they might avoid the evils incident to a population ignorant and untrained in the requirements of a successful citizenship, yet their full purpose is defeated by the large number of children put to work too soon, or, as street gamins, forming the germ of a hoodlum pest. The results from this condition are evident: First—A distinct class kept in ignorance. Second—Child labor usurping the place of adult labor. Third—The lowering of the physical and moral vigor of the community consequent on child labor. Fourth—A criminal class nurtured in a listless opposition to all demands of society. It is the function of the State to provide for the individual whatever may be necessary for him to have that the common weal may be secured, if the same cannot be secured by his own exertions. And on this ground alone is taxation for public education tenable. The public schools have been formed by the State for its own protection and assistance, and if not accepted voluntarily by individuals, it is the further right and duty of the State to compel attendance, under proper limits of age and scholarship, in some efficient school, public, parochial or private. The active co-operation of every one interested in the suppression of hoodlumism, child-labor and ignorance is required." The opinions of many eminent educators have also been obtained by the society, all of whom express themselves in favor of compulsory education in some form.

Superintendent Kerlin, of the Pennsylvania Training School for Feeble-minded Children, has been investigating the causes of feeble-mindedness in children. Five hundred cases were examined. Of these, fifty-five children were of consumptive stock, six were the offspring of paralytics, and fifteen of epileptics. Ten of the children were descended from insane parents and seventeen from weak-minded parents. The parents of thirty-four were nervously disordered, and thirty-eight, or less than 8 per cent, intemperate. The parents of seven of the children had married, being too closely related by blood. Turning from the cause to the effect, the superintendent states that twenty of the children were aphasic, that is, had not the faculty of remembering. Fifteen were afflicted with hydrocephalus, big-headedness, and twenty-four with microcephalus, or small-headedness. Twenty-nine were victims of St. Vitus dance, fourteen with brain-lesion, and twenty-one with epilepsy. Four of the children were radically insane, and twenty-one belonged to the first grade of imbecility. There are now in Pennsylvania 6,000 imbecile persons, of whom 3,000 are under eighteen years of age.

Mr. Sasaki Sato recently read a paper on "Student Life in Japan" at a meeting of the Johns Hopkins Literary Society. He said that to be a good Japanese student requires considerable work. "Although," he said, "we study many languages, we do not study what you call the classics, so there is no need at present in Japan for Mr. Charles Francis Adams. I am afraid students in Japan overwork, but they have all sorts of amusements, fencing with swords of bamboo, spearing, wrestling, and they have introduced baseball. When they grow tired, they go to story-telling, public speaking and debating societies. Students have begun to take some part in political debates. We have two parties—the Conservative and Radical—and the students take sides and room together according to their political feelings. The feeling became so great that the Government ruled that no students under the senior class could take active part in politics. Student life from all points is very pleasant."
