NOTES ON EDUCATION.

Dr. Ely, Professor of Political Economy in Johns Hopkins University, aided by two of his advanced pupils, is preparing a "History of American Political Economy." The list of books written by Johns Hopkins men is already quite large. Several of the "special studies" now in progress by advanced students will be prepared for publication. In the biological department of the University, courses of lectures will soon be delivered on "The Metamorphosis of Insects," "The Embryology of Insects" and "The Relationship between Vertebrates and Invertebrates."

A writer in The Boston Advertiser complains that teachers in that State are frequently removed without just cause, and he calls for the abrogation of the practice of electing teachers for a single year. "Let this annual humiliation," he says, "this crippling anxiety, and this liability of keen and cruel injustice, cease. Let teachers be elected to serve during efficiency and good behavior. Let us have no possibility of this worse than Greek ostracism in Massachusetts."

Philadelphia appears to be fully roused to the necessity of industrial education. President Steel, of the Board of Education, in his annual address the other day, said that an industrial school is now one of the greatest needs of that city. There should be such a school, he thought, capable of accommodating 2,000 students. The work-rooms should be ample and provided with machinery for the manipulation of metal, wood and textile fabrics. All the sciences that apply to the manipulation of these materials into articles of use in our daily life should be taught in connection with their immediate practical application, from the generation of steam to the mixing of dyes. Such a school would be an inestimable blessing to the youth of the city, and would eventually pay ten-fold its cost in its influence upon our vast local industries. The city cannot afford to neglect or postpone provision for a school of this character. It probably would not be possible to find a city in Europe with half the industries of Philadelphia without one or more such schools. The public must depend on this department for the suggestion and plan for such a school, and there is little doubt the proposition will receive cordial support from the people.

The public school library of St. Louis is well filled with good and useful books, both English and American, and a large number of pupils use it.

A conference of the school superintendents of Virginia will be held in Richmond next Tuesday. Among the speakers will be General Eaton, the Rev. Dr. J. L. M. Curry and Professor Newell.

There are 330 Colleges and Universities in the United States, of which only twenty-four have more than 200 students, and only seventeen have more than twenty teachers. A large number of these colleges furnish no better an education than can be obtained in a high school of the first class. One "university" in this country has three professors and twelve students; and another has two professors and eighteen students. These professors can take the college home with them at night, and thus prevent it from getting into mischief.

One-third of the building which will ultimately be the University of Texas is completed. When its building is entirely finished it will need only two things to constitute it a great school—good teachers and good pupils—and the latter will come if the former are provided. There are now 160 young men from Texas pursuing a collegiate course in institutions outside of Texas. It should be the aim of the home university to attract such young men by the thoroughness and excellence of its course of studies.
