NOTES ON EDUCATION.

A correspondent of The Christian Union has a good word to say about the so-called Greek-Letter Societies of American Colleges. "A feature of college life," he says, "which I have watched with considerable interest during the past six or seven years, especially as seen at Amherst, is the development of the Greek-Letter Societies. Three or four of them have buildings of their own; two or three more, buildings which they hire. The Chi Psi is just completing a very pretty club-house, on a commanding position on the hill, looking down across the meadows toward Old Hadley and Northampton. The policy of Amherst is to guide, not repress; it has pursued this policy toward the secret societies (I believe the same thing may be said of Williams College); and under this guidance the societies have grown to be valuable and serviceable elements in the college life. These club-houses are furnished with reading-rooms and parlors; it will not be long before they have libraries; and they have under their roof sleeping accommodations for most of their members. Private homes and society buildings are gradually taking the place of the dormitories, where dirt and noise abound, and where the miscellaneous herding of boys without any regard to congeniality tends to barbarism and certainly not to study. I never belonged to a secret society myself; but my observation of their practical effect on study and character, as seen in a number of instances in Amherst during the past six years, has made me a convert to their value, as organized and operated there."

The Kindergartens of Boston have been prosperous during the past year.

President Thomas Bicknell, of the National Educational Association, has just returned from Madison, Wis., where the meeting of the association will take place next month. He says that all the preliminary arrangements are nearly completed. It will undoubtedly be one of the largest and most important meetings of the kind ever held in this country. More than 500 teachers will attend from New-England alone.

Much interest is felt throughout the country generally in the recent changes in the curriculum of Harvard University. Beginning with next year, the study of the Greek language and literature, the Latin language and literature will be no longer required studies for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. This change in the course of studies is in accordance with the general policy of Harvard for the last twenty years, which has been to increase the number of elective studies. This policy has so commended itself to the college authorities by its results, that they are now entirely willing to try it on a larger scale than ever before. It will be interesting to see how far this policy meets the needs of modern life, and whether the study of Latin and Greek will suffer a decline when they are placed on the list of electives.

Joaquin Miller is anxious to have all kinds of tools put on the list of studies in the public schools. This is what converted him: "I attended court the other day," he says, "in a civil case, and the young lawyer provoked the contempt of all present by his ignorance of the simplest principles of mechanical industry. Think of a young lawyer leaning back and asking the witness to explain to the jury what is a jack-plane! It cost him his case. Of course the fellow was a fool, and would probably have lost it anyway. But you can clearly see how much better it would be for a lawyer, every professional man indeed, to know about all mechanics, if that knowledge could be carried on as a sort of healthful exercise during his school days."

Northfield Seminary, an institution of Christian training founded by D. L. Moody, sent out its first class of young women graduates the other day. It is in a flourishing condition, and is so crowded with pupils that new buildings will soon have to be erected.

This is what The Milwaukee Sentinel says about the charges made against President Bascom of the Wisconsin State University, by Mr. Keyes: Through the State and beyond the State, the recent noisy announcements that one of the members of the Board of Regents of the State University has preferred, or was about to prefer, charges against President Bascom, locking to his deposition, have doubtless attracted attention, and perhaps they have awakened anxiety on the part of friends of the University. We have too much confidence in the average common sense of the men who compose the Board of Regents to believe that they will take any action to displace or to rebuke the president on the charges that are reported to have been made by Mr. Keyes. It would be a serious misfortune for the State if any action should be taken by the board which shall seem to be a condemnation or official complaint of President Bascom for his course which is said to be the basis of Mr. Keyes' charges. Mr. Keyes is a member of the board. He does not like Dr. Bascom. He takes advantage of a little local excitement on the part of the worst of the saloon-keepers in Madison, their attorneys and some politicians, to try to drive Dr. Bascom from the position of President of the University.

It is not worth the while to argue the weakness of the grounds of complaint or the absurdity of expecting to find a man fit to be president, who will be willing to so emasculate himself as to take no interest in the local affairs of the town in which he lives. The people cannot afford to be patient with such conduct by a regent. If reckless trifling with one of the highest interests of the State by a man appointed to be its guardian. There is no reason to believe that the Board of Regents will listen to such charges as a ground of action of any kind. From all parts of the State there should come such a protest against this foolishness that even Mr. Keyes will see his mistake.

NEWPORT,
BY GEORGE PARSONS LATHROP.
1 vol., 12mo. Paper 50c.
"A story of a good deal of strength and of a fine literary quality. In the latter respect it will compare favorably with the more labored and artificial but much less poetic work of some of Mr. Lathrop's noted contemporaries. His novels have the refinement of motive which characterizes the analytic school, but his manner is far more direct and dramatic."—[Christian Union.
