LITERARY NOTES.

Tennyson's forthcoming book of poems will contain a new piece, something like the "Northern Farmer" in style, but written in the Irish brogue. About half the poems in the book are new.

Mr. Caldecott has written and illustrated an article on "Hunting" for the Christmas number of The English Illustrated Magazine.

"The Garotters" is said to be the title of an illustarted farce which Mr. Howells has contributed to the Christmas Harper.

"Othmar, a sequel to "Princess Napraxine," is Ouida's new novel, now in press.

The Hon. William D. Kelley's "Lincoln and Stanton: A Study of the War Administration of 1863," will shortly be brought out by the Putnams.

A "Bibliography of Church History" is announced by D. C. Heath & Co. It has been prepared by J. A. Fisher, of Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. Ruskin's "Præterita," or outlines of scenes and thoughts in his past life, are being brought in parts from the press of John Wiley & Sons. That chapter entitled "On the Banks of the Tay" is full of engaging reminiscences, some humorous and some pathetic, of his childhood.

Parts VIII. and IX. of Mr. Ruskin's edition of Miss Alexander's "Roadside Songs of Tuscany," have been issued by John Wiley & Sons. Each contains two of Miss Alexander's strangely vivid drawings and several poems both in verse and prose. We say "in prose," for each little story is so beautiful in feeling and expression as to merit the name of poem. The printing of the "Songs" is exquisite.

L'Art for July 15, August 1 and September 1 has been received. The July number contains, in the text, a paper on St. Mark of Venice by G. de Léris, a continuation of Victor Cesserole's study of Alessandro Vittoria, and two papers by Paul Leroi, on the Basilica of St. Mark, and the Nuremburg Exposition. The illustrations include an etching by Ringel, "The Parisienne," from his own work in the Salon of 1885, a heliogravure of Dujardin, after the marble of A. Mercié, the subject being a design for the tomb of Charles Ferry, and several wood-cuts illustrating the papers of Leroi. The August number has in the text a description of a family portrait of Franz Hals, by Emile Michel, an archæological study by Charles Diehl, in Ravenna, a paper on the Cologne Museum by J. B. Willems, and the usual departments. The illustrations comprise an etching by A. Monzin of Alma Tadema's picture "A Love Missile," an exquisite "Portrait of Mme. L—," by Rodolph Piguet, from the Salon of 1885, and a wood-cut of the family portrait attributed to Franz Hals. There are also many decorative wood-cuts and small engravings in the text. The first September number contains a feuilleton by Mikhail Achkinasi, a posthumous fragment of Tourguenell's, a paper on the decorative panels of Francois Ehrmann, by Louis Decamps, one on Allegories and Emblems, by John Grand-Carteret, Coserole's continuation of Alessandro Vittoria, a note on Theophilus Chandler by Adolphe Piat, and the departments. Among the illustrations are an engraving (full page) of Decamps's picture, "Pierrot disturbed at his meal," a sketch of a Chestnut Hill (Philadelphia) country house designed by Chandler, and several wood cuts illustrating the text. The Courrier de L'Art contains the usual matter.

The United Service Magazine for August is particularly interesting. Its special feature is an article on "The most efficient battery for a dispatch boat," by Lieutenant-Commander F. M. Barber, United States Navy. The author makes therein a comparison of the advantages of a great gun and a Hotchkiss battery for a vessel, as regards the disposition of weight in reference to the structural strength of the ship; his argument is in favor of the latter. The subject is thoroughly and ably treated, and the deductions are drawn from a careful review of reports of naval engagements and from practical experiments. William Miller Owen, ex-Colonel of the Washington Artillery of New Orleans, contributes a paper on "Recollections of the third day at Gettysburg." And in an interesting chapter on "To, About and Across Madagascar," by Lieutenant M. A. Shufeldt, United States Navy, gives some good advice to would-be visitors to that island.
