CALLING FOR THE BOOKS.

TESTIMONY IN THE CUTTING CASE.

JOHN G. HECKSCHER EXAMINED—COUNSEL REPROVED BY THE SURROGATE.

The Cutting estate controversy was again before the Surrogate yesterday. The question under consideration is whether a new citation shall be issued requiring General William Cutting to show cause why he should not be removed from the position of executor of his father's estate. Lawyers and witnesses were on hand. There was the portly form of Robert L. Cutting, jr., who nodded condescendingly to the Surrogate and watched the proceedings with a severely critical expression. John G. Heckscher, was there, complacent and affable as usual. John Benjamin and J. Bowers Lee also waited their turns to testify. The presence of all these brokers was due to a desire on the part of the petitioners to hear what they knew about William Cutting's stock transactions. Mr. Heckscher was first called. He made his bow to the Surrogate, gave his cane and hat to an attendant, and kissed the book. Franklin Bartlett, counsel for the petitioners, began the examination. Occasionally Elihu Root, who sat by his side, made suggestions. George Zabriskie, General Cutting's counsel, sat with folded hands, looking at the floor. He was ready at any moment, however, to jump to his feet with the cry "I object." His colleague, Charles D. Burrill, looked around the court room with a defiant air.

In answer to Mr. Bartlett's questions Mr. Heckscher testified that he is a broker, with places of business at No. 58 Exchange place and at the St. James Hotel. The name of his firm is J. G. Heckscher & Co., of which himself, Beverly Robinson and C. M. Taylor were members. Mr. Robinson died about a year ago and Mr. Taylor is still Mr. Heckscher's partner.

Q.—Will you state what were your transactions as a broker with William Cutting? A.—Everything was done through my partner, Mr. Robinson. I was always uptown. General Cutting would sometimes call at the uptown office and ask for Mr. Robinson, but my business transactions with him were limited to conversation about the state of the market.

Q.—What period do the transactions of your firm with General Cutting cover? A.—The period of the existence of the firm of Robinson, Heckscher & Co., from February, 1882, until 1884.

Q.—Don't you know from the books of the firm what General Cutting's transactions were?

Mr. Zabriskie objected to this question as he had objected to most of the others. But Mr. Heckscher was by this time somewhat roused and insisted on answering.

"I don't want to appear more of a fool than I really am," said he. "I want you to understand that I had perfect confidence in my partner and never thought of examining the books in reference to his dealings with our customers."

"Mr. Robinson is dead now, isn't he?" continued Mr. Bartlett. "Did he take the books with him when he departed this life?"

"You know perfectly well he didn't," answered Mr. Heckscher with scorn.

"Well, then, who has the books now?"

"My partner, Mr. Taylor, has them. He refused to allow them to be brought to court, asserting that he has the right to retain them."

Mr. Bartlett asked the Surrogate to direct the books to be brought into court in accordance with the subpœna issued to Mr. Heckscher. While a copy of the subpœna was being sought, the examination went on. On further questioning Mr. Heckscher testified that General Cutting's transactions with his firm were never large, and that he was not looked on as an important customer. His transactions never amounted to more than 2,000 or 3,000 shares.

Q.—Was the net result of these transactions a profit or a loss? A.—One year General Cuting made money, and another he lost. The net result was probably a loss.

Q.—Has your firm still a claim against him, and if so, for how much? A.—Yes, we have a claim against him of some $5,000 or $6,000.

Q.—How were checks from General Cutting signed—simply "William Cutting," or "William Cutting, executor?" A.—Always simply "William Cutting."

Q.—On what bank were they drawn? A.—Generally on the Phenix National.

The questions that followed brought out the fact that at one time the firm of Robinson, Heckscher & Co. held some bonds of the Toledo, Wabash and St. Louis Railroad as margin in one of General Cutting's transactions. These were bonds belonging to his father's estate. Not many of them were pledged as collateral—less than 50, Mr. Heckscher thought. They were sealed and put in a safe. Afterward they were returned to General Cutting's agents, Lee & Ryan, and Mr. Heckscher's firm has the receipt for them. Mr. Zabriskie moved to strike out all the testimony about these bonds on the ground that it was hearsay, being what Mr. Heckscher had learned from conversations with his partner. The testimony was, however, admitted as being in the nature of an affidavit bearing on the question whether a citation should be issued to General Cutting. Mr. Heckscher's subpœna was at this point produced and it was found that the wording of the sentence which ordered him to bring his firm's books into court was defective. Hereupon Mr. Root jumped up and showered a series of questions upon the witness in his most cutting tones. "Did the firm of Robinson, Heckscher & Co. keep a ledger?" "Did it keep a day book?" "Did it keep a blotter?" "Did it keep a journal?" Mr. Heckscher nodded his head superciliously in reply to each question. "Will you produce in court each and all of such books as contain records of the transactions of Mr. Cutting with the firm of Robinson, Heckscher & Co?" "I object," cried Mr. Zabriskie as usual. The Surrogate decided that the question might be answered as it tended to show the attitude of the witness toward the case. Mr. Heckscher's attitude toward the case was evidently an attitude of hostility toward the petitioners. Mr. Root repeated his question and the witness replied with a bland smile, "I will not." This ended Mr. Heckscher's examination for the day.

T. J. Rush was next called. He was General Cutting's clerk in the management of the trust estate, and at the last hearing of the case had promised to produce in court certain books. When asked by Mr. Bartlett whether he had the books with him, he replied that he had not. "Why have you not brought them?" asked Mr. Bartlett severely. Mr. Rush with evident embarrassment explained that he had intended to bring the books according to his agreement, that he had them all ready, but that counsel for General Cutting had forbidden him to do so, telling him that he had no control over the books. Mr. Root desired that the testimony taken at the last hearing should be read and expressed his opinion that the Surrogate had directed that the books should be produced. The testimony showed that the witness had agreed to produce the books and that General Cutting's counsel had made no objection, but that no formal direction to that effect had been made. Mr. Root then rose and said quietly: "May it please your Honor, I submit that it is trifling with this court for gentlemen to sit by and hear an engagement of this kind made without interposing any objection and subsequently to use means to defeat its fulfillment."

Surrogate Rollins answered: "The course of counsel in this case has certainly not been above criticism."

The case was then adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a. m.

ECCENTRIC MISS MARX'S WILL.

DIRECTIONS WICH SHE LEFT REGARDING HER FUNERAL.

The contest over the will of the last of the eccentric Marx family was concluded yesterday so far as taking testimony is concerned before Surrogate Rollins. The only witness examined was Townsend Wandell, one of the executors of Miss Catharine Henrietta Marx, who produced the following letter, copies of which were sent to each of the other executors, Charles W. Morrill, of St. Alban's Church, the residuary legatee, and the late Edward H. Ludlow:

TO MY EXECUTORS: I desire that I may be buried in my family vault in Woodlawn Cemetery, in my brother's grave (Henry Carroll Marx), my coffin of oak, to be made in the mediæval style, with brass mountings, only the date of my death to be engraved on the coffin plate, and I wish to be dressed in one of my white muslin dresses. I wish a neat hearse, open glass sides, to be drawn by one or white horses. I wish to be driven out to the cemetery, and none in a three carriage to follow, all alike neat and clean, the coachmen to wear gloves, no black pall to be thrown over my coffin. My papers, bonds, jewelry, etc., are deposited in safe deposit Company in the Masonic Building, twenty-third st. and Sixthave. My bank account, kept in the Fifth-Avenue Bank, corner Fourth-ave. and Fifth-st. I have also some money in the savings bank in Bleecker st. I have also some money in the Manhattan Savings Bank, Broadway, corner Bleecker st., and also in the Third Avenue Savings Bank. The books of these banks will be found in my safe in my house, 122 East Fortieth st. I have also money in the United States Trust Company, Wall st. My relations that are not mentioned in my will, the reason is this: Some I have never seen, others only in childhood or girlhood. They have never seen near me in all my troubles. I wish to say distinctly if anything is said hereafter about the gifts in my will, to the Rev. C. W. Morrill, that I have never been to him in confession, nor has he been at any time my spiritual director. He has never spoken to me about my property or suggested that I ought to make a will. He has always been a good kind friend to me, like a brother. He is an upright, good, honorable, high-toned gentleman. I know he will make good use of that which I have left him. I have disposed of my property in my will to suit myself.

CATHARINE HENRIETTA MARX, June 17, 1882.

Appended to the letter was a direction that her death notice in the newspapers should be as follows:

DIED.—Catharine Henrietta Marx, daughter of the late Asher Marx, esq., of New-York—funeral rites, no flowers (date of death and residence.)

In accordance with the request of Miss Marx this letter was not opened until after her death. This closed the testimony, and Clifford A. H. Bartlett moved that the application to admit the will to probate be decided on the grounds that the due execution of the will was not proved and that the presumption of fact that the will was made under undue influence had not been overthrown. Counsel were allowed one week within which to present their briefs. George G. DeWitt, who drew the will, and Judge Ambrose Monell appeared for the proponents and Franklin and C. A. H. Bartlett and Douglass Campbell for the contestants.

The Marx family figured prominently in New-York society many years ago. They were descended from Dr. Marx, court physician to the King of Hanover, and their father, Asher Marx, had married a lady of the old Livingston family and at his death left them a fortune. Henry, known as "Dandy," Marx was the first man who drove a four-in-hand in this city, and was captain of a famous cavalry company in the old New-York militia. He died young. His sister, Emma Julia, at her death left all her property to her youngest sister, Catharine Henrietta, at which the second sister, Mary Caroline, took umbrage and threatened to contest the will. To settle the difficulty Catharine Henrietta consented to give a portion of the property to her. Mary Caroline died in 1878, giving Father J. B. Bradley, a Roman Catholic priest, a life interest in her estate, which at his death was to go to the Little Sisters of the Poor. Catharine contested this will and it was finally decided by the Court of Appeals that it was valid with the exception of the provision for the Little Sisters of the Poor. Before Catharine died she followed the example of this sister and made the will now contested.

SQUATTERS DEFEATED IN A SUIT.

William Clark and Jane Clark were among the settlers on the banks of the Morris Canal Basin ten years ago. Their canalboat was run up on the shore and they built a small house on it. The American Dock and Improvement Company, which owned the basin, tried to persuade the squatters to pay a small rent, but as they would not recognize the company's claim to ownership ejectment suits were begun in 1883. The Clark family was one of those removed and their house was taken to pieces and removed. Clark began a suit for $2,000 damages for the removal of the house. The trial yesterday before Judge Shipman in the United States Circuit Court resulted in favor of the company.

NO MORE TESTIMONY IN MISS MORGAN'S CASE.

The examination in regard to the sanity of Miss Lucinda Morgan was continued yesterday before a Sheriff's jury. Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton said he had conversed with Miss Morgan at Dr. Choate's asylum. She was neat in her dress, orderly, and talked well. She moved like a sane person. Her business capacity seemed to him to be good, her only peculiarity being that she was morbidly conscientious. She declared that she owned New-Jersey Central and Rio Grande stock, saying that the latter was "horrid" stock.

Mrs. Julia Robert, whose first husband was Charles Morgan, a brother of Miss Morgan, testified that she had been active in bringing these proceedings because she thought they would be beneficial to her sister-in-law. She was anxious to have her taken out of the asylum as soon as possible and desired to have it finally determined whether she was of sound mind. She declined politely to answer a question as to when she was last married. This concluded the testimony. Counsel will address the jury on Friday.

Miss Morgan has sent a dispatch to her counsel stating that she did not intend to charge that her attendant had stolen the laces which she declared, when on the witness-stand, had mysteriously disappeared.

MESSRS. MOSS AND WALLACK MULCTED.

A suit brought by the executors of the will of George A. Osgood against Theodore Moss and Lester Wallack on a note for $10,000, made by Mr. Moss and indorsed by Mr. Wallack, was tried yesterday in the Supreme Court before Judge Beach. The defendants claimed that the money was not liable, saying that Mr. Osgood had advised Mr. Moss not to speculate in Wall Street, as he would lose his money, but to rely on him. They said that Mr. Osgood had carried the account of Mr. Moss in C. J. Osborn's office under a promise to protect him from all loss and that the note had been given for use in speculations which Mr. Osgood had supervised. Justice Beach directed that a verdict be rendered for the plaintiffs for the full amount. John M. Bowers appeared for the plaintiffs and John R. Dos Passos for the defendants.
