OUTLINES OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY, Designed as a Text Book and for Private Reading. By GEORGE PARK FISHER, D. D., LL. D., pp. xvi. 674. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co.

Dr. Fisher has produced decidedly the best book of the kind extant in English. The "Outlines of Universal History" is comprehensive, broad, critical in the best sense, bringing together the authorities with unexampled fulness, carefully presenting the freshest views of the strongest scholars on the most doubtful and disputed points, and furnishing to the student such a variety and mass of the most necessary and trustworthy information as can be found between the covers of no other single volume. Remarkable judgment has been evinced in the preparation of the work. The sketch of political events is always accompanied by succinct outlines of the progress of literature, art, science, and social development. Every chapter ends with an unusually full list of books for consultation, and the selection, though often necessarily difficult, permits few opportunities for criticism. We note in the account of Indian religions one or two slips, as for instance, in the explanation of Buddhism, where Karma is described as "another being." Karma, however, is not an entity, nor can it be said that Buddha "attributed to the soul no substantial existence," at least in the sense apparently intended here. These, however, are slight errors. In the bulk of the work examination shows few mistakes, and the dates appear to have been subjected to a conscientious verification. Considering the modest size of the volume it is surprising how much has been got into it. The addenda are full beyond precedent, and there is a refreshing absence of the dryness which too commonly renders books of this character revolting to the young and wearisome to the mature. Dr. Fisher has endeavored, and with no small measure of success (though the undertaking is as dangerous as fascinating) to show the unity of history. Free use has been made of the latest researches. No sectarian or other bias has been admitted to the work. The newest results of the most scientific inquiry have always been given. The map illustration is unusually ample and the maps are unusually clear and good. The publishers, by the use of a variety of type for distinction, emphasis and clearness, have considerably enhanced the value of the book, which is in every respect genuine, trustworthy, lucid and full. It is quite as useful a work for the general reader as for schools and colleges, and deserves the most cordial welcome and the sincerest praise from every friend of education.
