NOTES ON THE MAGAZINES.

GLIMPSES OF THE MARCH NUMBERS.

No octogenarian has ever set forth more fascinating reminiscences than those which Mr. Gayarré has contributed to Harper. No one else will ever paint for us like this the life of Louisiana under the old régime. The paper is a gem in its way. Why do not American artists in search of subjects for holiday beautifying take an article so characteristic and make it a joy forever.

Very full of practical information is the Harper paper on the New-York Police Department; and to "Dueling in France" Mr. Child devotes more space than his subject quite deserves. Mr. R. M. Johnston's story is a variation on a theme he has touched before—and a very pleasant variation.

Does not Mr. Curtis beg the question in the Easy Chair talk about the realistic novelist?

The opening pages of Mr. Taine's forthcoming volume appear in The Princeton Review in the shape of a paper on Napoleon Bonaparte. It would be manifestly unjust to devote any criticism to so small a part of a serious work, but we may remind the accomplished editor of the Review that M. Taine does not sign himself "Henri" but "Hippolyte."

The poor reader has not much consideration in these days at the hands of the critical writer. The contempt for their audiences which divers authors have recently expressed make us wonder why they condescend to reduce fodder for so dull a beast. Why not sell dry-goods instead? Miss Shaw in her article in The Princeton on George Meredith takes this scornful tone in regard to the novel-reading public. In no large sense is this justifiable. In these days a book, soon or late, reaches its level; the effects of unreasonable prejudice are no more lasting than are those of log-rolling.

Professor Shaler's careful and comforting paper on the "Stability of the Earth" opens the March Scribner in a dignified way. It is good to know that North America is a comparatively safe region and from this vantage ground to read Mr. Washburne's account of an upheaval as great as that of an earthquake—that of the Paris Commune. The story is a tragic one and it carries a lesson for all civilized governments. In the portraits which accompany this paper we find again the curiously indented forehead which seems to belong to the revolutionist of the furious type.

Dr. Hale gives in The Forum an interesting list of "Books that have Helped Me." These volumes are undoubtedly the same that have helped to form every clever boy and girl of the last two generations. General comparisons would probably produce but few variations.

There are suggestions to other novelists in Dr. Hammond's Forum paper on "Mysterious Disappearances." An equally thrilling, if less fantastic, romance than "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" might be built upon the stories of the men who have wholly lost consciousness of one life to emerge suddenly into another in a different part of the country.

Dr. Holmes's paper on his European trip, as printed in The Atlantic, has all the charm of a familiar letter to a friend. It is fragrant with that kindly humor with which the best of Doctors has long cheered a prosaic time.

What with Agnes Repplier's "Curiosities of Criticism," J. B. Perkins's paper on Gautier, W. C. Lawton's article on "The Hippolytus of Euripides," H. E. Scudder's criticism on "Longfellow's Art," and various reviews of new books, The Atlantic has a tone even more distinctly literary than usual. It makes thereby a peculiar and direct appeal to the lovers of literature for its own sake.

How delicately musical is the close of Mr. Lowell's Atlantic poem! It is of slight texture but it pleases and almost atones for the first few verses, which—to be frank—are not poetry.

The young writer who contributes to The Atlantic "The Lady from Maine" has a certain facility in story-telling—but what a silly story she has told! If her evident talent has wise training Miss "Lawrence Saxe" will, ten years hence, laugh at this youthful work and wish it had not been written.

There is a touching story of human effort and human affection to be read between the lines of the sketch of E. L. Youmans contributed by his sister to The Popular Science Monthly. The young man's struggle to acquire a scientific training under stress of almost total blindness was a noble one; and not less striking is the record of the devotion of the sister who was eyes and hands to him.

Until the Hay-Nicolay history of "Lincoln" appears in complete form it will not be easy for careless readers to appreciate the large and noble fashion in which the authors have framed and treated their subject. Each successive instalment shows with increasing force how inestimable is this contribution to the history of the Republic.

Mr. Cable's "Grande Pointe" has a trivial motive, but the story is told with spirit, grace and humor. It is far in advance of his other recent work.

The Century offers an admirable portrait of Edwin M. Stanton, and while the article which accompanies it gives us nothing of novel and striking interest it helps us to a clearer comprehension of a much-abused and misunderstood man.

The Century paper on "Composite Photography" with more of suggestive comment and less technical description would have been more entertaining; but the portrait of Mademoiselle, the Class of '86 of Smith College, atones for any amount of dulness. The face is not beautiful, but it indicates an intellectual and moral development of singular strength and loveliness. If this be the type of the girl of the future, the millennium may be a little nearer than it seems to be.

Mr. Hassard, in his charming Century paper on California camp-life, goes near to persuading us that one can find a little millennium of one's own on an Occidental mountain. It is a delightful account of an outing of which the pleasure was great and the expense small.

There is much that is winning in the bit of autobiography which Mr. Robert Burdette publishes in Lippincott. It is a chapter of kindly confidences; and not the least pleasant thing in it is its author's manly expression of regret that he ever wrote his "Life of William Penn." "It was a book entirely uncalled for," says Mr. Burdette. "There was really no reason for making fun of a character worthy of the admiration and esteem of men. It was a foolish thing and a wrong one, the writing of that book. It did no harm, however. Nobody read it, and I will say in confidence—and I don't want this repeated outside the office—that I still owe the publishers eight dollars for indexing. The original bill was twelve dollars, I think, but in three or four years enough books have been sold to apply my royalty, four dollars, on the bill for indexing. Still, I am sorry I wrote it. But that's nothing for me. Every day of my life I am sorry for something I did yesterday. So constantly am I doing penance that I live in a state of chronic remorse and habitual hair shirt. I only hope that the day after I die I may not be sorry I did it."

New Publications.

THE NEW-YORK TRIBUNE begins a long review of

THE JESUIT'S RING,

A Romance of Mount Desert, by AUGUSTUS ALLEN HAYES, just published by CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS in two editions, cloth $1, and paper 50 cents, by saying:

"Mr. Hayes has certainly well fulfilled one of the first duties of a romance writer, which is to tell an interesting story. He has ingeniously combined antique legend and modern reality by a thread of connection between the Jesuit missionary settlement of Saint Sauveur and the contemporary life of Bar Harbor, and by a device which is fanciful but not too fantastic, he has managed to carry the romantic quality all through the diversified narrative."

AN invaluable Aid to the Memory. History in rhyme. Metrical summaries of the history of England, France and America (through the Revolutionary War), new results. Price, 50 cents each. By Mrs. C. H. GARDNER, of School for Young Ladies, 603 5th-ave.
