A STRANGE CHARACTER.

SOLOMON MAIMON; An Autobiography. Translated from the German, with additions and notes, by J. Clark Murray, LL. D., F. R. S. C. 12mo., pp. 307. Boston: Cupples & Hurd.

The autobiography of Solomon Maimon, now for the first time done into English by Professor Murray, of McGill College, is a quaint and curious record of intellectual development under untoward circumstances. Maimon was a Polish Jew, born about the middle of the eighteenth century. His father was a farmer and tavern-keeper, who was ruined by the joint efforts of his own unpractical ways and the frauds and oppressions practised on him by the stewards of the Polish nobleman whose tenant he was. The boy was reared in poverty and educated in the strictest Talmudic forms, acquiring at an early age a mass of the most useless superstition and legend. From the study of the Talmud he proceeded to that of the Kabbala. He was anxious to acquire the so-called "Practical Kabbala," which was supposed to contain directions by which magic arts could be learned, and on one occasion having, as he thought, mastered and fully complied with all the forms for making himself invisible, he applied the practical test of going to the Jewish academy and giving one of his comrades a vigorous box on the ear. To his astonishment, the blow was promptly returned, and he was thus forced to realize that he was not invisible.

He gives a curious account of his marriage, which occurred when he was very young. His father had undertaken, according to the Jewish custom, to make the contract, but a bargain with the mother of our girl having encountered a hitch, the rabbi went elsewhere, and had nearly arranged a marriage, when the party of the first part learned what was going on and proceeded to make trouble. In point of fact, Maimon's father appears to have had no scruple in obtaining a dowry from two families, on behalf of his son, and Maimon himself seems to see nothing reprehensible in the matter. In the end he got a shrewish wife, with a mother-in-law who led him a terrible life, and frequently they came to blows, he on one occasion emptying a bowl of curds and cream over his mother-in-law's head. He was, however, a born philosopher, and evidently never cared much for either comfort or even decency. The greater part of his life was spent in squalid poverty, and when he had means he was too careless to take the least trouble with his personal appearance. In fact, he was a particularly dirty philosopher, reminding one of a European version of those Oriental gurus, whose bodies are covered with filth while their minds are absorbed in religious contemplation. Having fully qualified himself as a rabbi, Maimon began to question the grounds of his faith, and his native scepticism soon shook his faith both in the Ta'mud and Kabbala. He was a follower of Maimonides, and an enthusiastic one, and later he adopted the Kantian system. A stranger career falls to few men. He went to Germany. After many difficulties and much privation, he reached Berlin, and there made friends and obtained employment. He was self-taught, and imperfectly, but his great quickness of mind enabled him to assimilate new knowledge almost mechanically, and he made rapid progress.

He had, however, no adaptability. What he held that he would maintain, no matter in what company. He possessed no tact or judgment in worldly affairs, and could not earn his own living single-handed. He broke away from orthodox Judaism and struck out a system of thought for himself. He did some good translation, but very little original work, and his mingled independence and obstinacy clearly made him difficult to get on with. In his autobiography he sets everything down frankly and fully, but the book is much more a diary of thoughts and feelings than a narrative of events. As the history of human mental progress it possesses considerable interest, and Professor Murray's introduction and notes add to the value of the volume.

NOTICE TO WABASH BONDHOLDERS.

A mutually satisfactory arrangement has been made with the Defence Committee of the Second Mortgage Bondholders and the Committees represented by the undersigned.

Under this arrangement the Defence Committee agree to withdraw all opposition to the plan of reorganization, and their bonds are to be received by the Central Trust Co. without penalty.

That all bondholders may be upon an equal footing, they are now respectfully invited to deposit their bonds in the Trust Co. without penalty until further notice, and the penalties already paid will be returned.

Foreclosure bills have already been filed in the Courts on the First Mortgages, and decrees of sale will be obtained as soon as practicable. Meantime, in view of the very large majority of bonds united in support of the reorganization, it is hoped that outstanding bondholders will accept the offer now made to them.

THE PETROLEUM MARKET.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD AND RANGE OF PRICES.

The exuberance of the National holiday did not bring spirit to the oil market yesterday. The trading was not much larger than it was on Tuesday, and although strength as well as dulness was a prominent feature the advance was too small to be significant. The news from the Bakerstown district was favorable to lower prices, but from other parts of the field it was of a negative character. Based on the field news, the movement ought to have been downward, and for that reason, perhaps, the small advance was of some consequence. The export demand continues good and the supply is constantly being reduced. The trading is left to professional speculators, however, and the fluctuations from day to day do not reveal the intentions of the powers who really control the course of the market.

The range of prices and the total dealings were as follows:

	Stock Exchange.	Consolidated.
Opening	73⅞	74
Highest	74⅝	74⅝
Lowest	73⅞	73⅞
Final	74	74⅝
Sales, barrels	115,000	489,000

Refined oil was 7 1-8 cents a gallon.
